then, that this desire and this inability proclaim to us, but that there was once in man a true happiness of which there now remain to him only the mark and empty trace, which he in vain tries to fill from all his surroundings, seeking from things absent the help he does not obtain in things present? But these are all inadequate, because the infinite abyss can only be filled by an infinite and immutable object, that is to say, only by God Himself. He only is our true good, and since we have forsaken him, it is a strange thing that there is nothing in nature which has not been serviceable in taking His place; the stars, the heavens, earth, the elements, plants, cabbages, leeks, animals, insects, calves, serpents, fever, pestilence, war, famine, vices, adultery, incest. And since man has lost the true good, everything can appear equally good to him, even his own destruction, though so opposed to God, to reason, and to the whole course of nature.

Some seek good in authority, others in scientific research, others in pleasure. Others, who are in fact nearer the truth, have considered it necessary that the universal good, which all men desire, should not consist in any of the particular things which can only be possessed by one man, and which, when shared, afflict their possessors more by the want of the part he has not than they please him by the possession of what he has. They have learned that the true good should be such as all can possess at once, without diminution and without envy, and which no one can lose against his will. And their reason is tha

Not according to the news services that I receive. The locals were contacted by phone and it was then that they were told that without a judge the state guys would not be granted access. Rather than risk a confrontation (Which with the proliferation of TV crews there, would have been a live event), the state backed down.

If, as you allege, the confrontation did occur, why was there no coverage of it on the various TV and radio news services?

Let me guess, the Bush administration raced in and confiscated all footage right?

The constitution clearly defines that the act of appointing judicial nominees should be accompanied by a simple majority (up or down) vote.
The use of a filibuster to force a super majority vote is in violation, if not the letter of the law of the constitution, it is certainly a violation of the spirit of that law.

If the shoe was on the other foot and it was the republicans using this shameful tactic, you'd be one of the first to decry it.

The Bush administration is not the one trying to stall the Fred Lloyd lays out his "issues".

Why the need for multiple accounts? What possible legitimate use could one have for that? People who feel the need to remain anonymous (In addition to their regular account) tend to use those anon accounts when they want to say something that they'd be ashamed of signing

When you set up a site on your own, using your time and resources, you have the right to set the rules. As a user, you have the choice to either abide by them, or not join in. Plain and simple.

It is if you understand the behavioral comparisons and your responsibility as a member of a private group to follow the rules. For someone who claims to have a good knowledge of history and politics, you seem to fall glaringly short in areas of human nature and social behavior, and the concepts of responsibility.

There is no American birthright that claims that anyone has the right to ignore the rules of a private club and expect to remain as a member. There is also no American patriotic birthright that allows people the right to selectively ignore any law they feel is "unjust" and then claim civil disobedience as some sort of weak justification for it. The prisons are full of people who tried that trick. It's no different than those guys who try (and fail) to sue the IRS claiming that federal income tax is unconstitutional. While I laud their efforts, the law is not on their side.

But of course you did not, as to do so, would have invalidated your

Again, I ask you once

So keeping with your approach, it would be safe to say your "issues" regarding cb radio are born of your feelings being hurt. Erroneously thinking others become reactive like you merely becasue you are unable to distinguishing between issues and personal feelings has long plagued you and been responsible for countless and needless attacks you have

I'd say MANY people on QRZ have problems. In fact, it led to many new policies by the owner of the site.

No Dave, MANY people have these "problems" you speak of, regarding QRZ. Again, policy changes were not instituted because of a few random problem children.

Be specific......games are not illegal. Speaking of certain topics is not illegal. When one is banned because of a topic and NOT because of any abuse, it is called censorship.

Your admitted fondness and past defenses for freedom-impinging socialistic approaches when you do not personally agree with the message or topic is well documented in this group.

I'm not blaming you, you're paranoid. I'm asking what rules, if any, were violated, and you have not been able to cite a single one.

Many say he was kicked off because of the topic QRZ refused to entertain, as it illustrated the issue was not at all about feelings (such as you maintain), but about certain hypocrisy.

If you believe Dogie, spam, or sock pups take away from any meaningful discussion, far be it from me to try and tell you otherwise. In fact, just the opposite holds true for several of us. Example: the more Dougie posts, the more many of us giggle at his incompetence.

Thomas
Paine created his paper the Federalist and people like you screamed similar to what you offer now attempting to explain his actions,,,,,and his paper was anonymous.

>There is no comparison.

Exactly, as this site is not done by anonymous authors.

>Then why bring it up?

You invoked anonymity and sock pups. Stop being such a hypocrite.
Yet, the person you accuse makes very clear his intention for his actions....censorship. And these folks are not anonymous.

>But they violated the rules of a members only >forum and were TOSsed for it.

>The issue is not censorship.

So you say. Please help me understand these rules that you claim were broken. It appears you are merely echoing another's sentiments and have no clue what, if any, rule(s) were broken regaridng this issue.
You said to read his site,,,,I did,,and that very clearly says It is about censorship. Again, you appear to kow more about the issue than myself, as you are claiming things that are not on his site. How?

>I only know what I read.

Ahhh,,so you don't know about any rules, and are merely repeating what

In where and by who? Disruptive, can mean anything anyone wishes. If one wishes to discuss softball instead of radio, it can be viewed as disruptive. A person can not be disruptive on a forum unless one explicitly permits them inside their personal realm.

>When you are in a non-public >forum which is moderated, there are certain

Instead of being redundant, please be more specific,,that is,,,if,, of course, you know anything about any "breaking of rules" here and are not merely siding with QRZ when you have none of the facts and are merely surmising what you think to be true.

>When you set up a site on your own, using >your time and resources, you have the right to Agreed. However, if rules are arbitrarily made in direct response and as a means to silence one who is speaking of a topic the "ruler" wishes to silence, it's bullshit, no matter how you present it.

>You wouldn't engage in boisterous, lewd

LMAO,,you claim no comparison to the acts of anonymous publishing, then try and make a comparison between hammies and those who belong to a private golf club? HHAHHHAHAHHAHAHHA! THAT,,,,,,,is not a valid comparison by any wildest stretch of the imagination.

When one wishes to have an avenue free from undue interference and censorship, sometimes one must create that avenue themselves.

>Which is his right. Nothing wrong with that. But >let's not lose track

YOU are claiming a reason that is not detailed on his site.

>It is clearly illustrated to those who understand

Self-qualification regarding such is equal to tilting imaginary windmills in your own backyard, only no one else can see them.
In fact, his reasoning set forth is much differetnt from your subjective "reading between the lines" and assuming rules were broke, with nothing more than your personal biases and subjective view providing for such.

>Rules WERE broken. But you'd have to ask

>Fred Lloyd for exact details.

Fred Lloyd isn't the one posting that rules were broken concerning this user..you are.
This is twice in two days you have taken an American born patriotic birthright and trashed it,,first was the right to select civil disobedience, now, you accuse one who voices his own opinion on his own site with nothing more than your own based subjective opinion, formed by reading the site he took to task.

>There is no American birthright that claims >that anyone has the right to ignore the rules of >a private club and expect to remain as a

The freedom to respond how he sees fit and make his own site, is indeed his right.

>There is also no American patriotic birthright

>that allows people the right to selectively >ignore any law they feel is "unjust" and then >claim civil disobedience as some sort of weak >justification for it.

Correct, which is why you deleted the proper definition of such that I presented. Civil Disobedience is NOT a right to ignore ANY law, as you intentionally distorted, but a METHOD of selectively ignoring a specific law for a specific reason. Now that you have been armed and corrected with the proper definition, you shouldn't make the same mistake again concerning the act.

> The prisons are full of people who tried that >trick.

Really? Would it prove to difficult for you to cite three cases of those imprisoned for an act of civil disobedience? After all, since the prisons are "full" of these people, you should have no problem citing but a few examples.

>It's no different than those guys who try (and >fail) to sue the IRS claiming that federal >income tax is unconstitutional.

It's very different, Dave. This is the part where your confusion regarding "criminal" and "civil" infractions and penalties invalidate your position that dxers and freebanders are federal criminals.

>While I laud their efforts, the law is not on their >side.

>And in just as many times you have made a >case that freedom of >expression should be universal even on >private forums,

I said nothing of the sort, Dave, your difficluties are really making you go off the deep end today, and regardless anything I said, it does not negate your problem with trashing legal actions by those whose political views you disagree.

>Who's legal actions did I trash?

Here you go again, asking of another without providing for your own claim. Cite a single passage where you insist I said anything of the sort regarding private forums, and then you will have earned the right to ask another question.
this is common respect and etiqueete concerning proper communication technique.

>and that any rules restricting behavior for the >better common good,

>are somehow unfair.

I said nothing of the sort.

>You implied as much.

More "reading between the lines" based on nothing more than self-qualification.

>You seem to think that Fred Lloyd did not >have the right to kick off the author of

>"fuckqrz.com" for what he claimed were rules >violations.

Not at all,,,I merely asked you what they were. In fact, my use of the word "if" regarding said acts, most definitely distinguishes such.

>You can't have anarchy and expect to remain >civilized.

Google "anarchy" and it has ALWAYS been you and the malicious sock puppets invoking the term.

>And that means what exactly?

Page from your quotes "Statistical Probability".

>There are far too many people who cannot >handle that much >responsibility.

There were also discussions on QRZ on the "other side".
Invocation of the site he decries as improperly censoring as the pillar of truth for -your- subjective bias is no different than the site builder's actions you take issue with,,,,you just happen to be on the "other side" (your words).

>So you are now claiming that Fred is a liar?

I have only your self-qualifications and statements concerning the issue. How you are able to transcend this to inferring another party not privy to this exchange as a "liar" is something only you can explain.

>There are (at least) two sides to every >.argument.

And the truth is usually somehwere in the middle, not on your side or his.

>There is no "my side". There is only what >happened and the reasons given for why it >happened.

I know you like to believe in such fairy tale endings, but once again, in the United States, there are always two sides to disagreeing parties. If there were not, civil court would not exist.

>The bottom line is that The author of the site

>(Which for some reason >is no longer there as I checked today),

Which lends even more to your non-credibility factor. It is there, Dave. Your difficulties today know no bounds.

>It was not there when I checked at the time I >posted. It has since returned. I don't know >what the problem was.

The site has been there all along, Dave. You were unable to locate it for whatever reason.

>He had a personal butting of heads with Floyd

>at QRZ, and was kicked >off of that site for not abiding by the rules.

Make up your mind. You claim it was personal (hence, your claim of "feelings being hurt") and then say it was a violation of rules. Be specific, Dave. What rule did this guy violate?

>Ask Fred, he'll give you a better explanation >than I will. I am just a casual observer.

Such is hardly an unbiased look at each site regarding the issue that sparked the creation of the site responsible for effectively moving you to the point of lambasting the creators.

>Sure it is. It doesn't matter how "noble" you >may think he is

Your difficulties have you making hypocritical erroneous assumptions all the live long day.

>In what way?

I have no idea what the guy is about, yet you found the need to erroneously assume I somehow feel the guy is "noble". What this astutely illustrates, is more of how you think.

>for

>"standing up" to the "fascist" rules on QRZ,

Of course we couldn't have you mention "anarchy" without presenting the word "fascist" and attempting to misattribute it to others, now, could we, Dave

>If the shoe fits.....

It never does, but that has never stopped you from jamming the shoe in your mouth by falsely attributing quotes to others.

>If you can't abide by them, the

And he has the right to make his own site,,,even more plain and simple, regardless the fact your bias has you reading between lines and saying things that are not there

>They are there to anyone who takes the time >to actually READ the whole thing.

Well, to be perfectly fair and honest, you said you arrived at your decision by reading the FQRZ.com site and told me to read it, yet, when presented with the fact that your claims are not to be found on that site anywhere, you invoke the site he took to task.
In
that vein, the site you take issue with is an instant success, for if it moved you in such a manner.

>There is something that you STILL don't >understand about me. I can separate factual >events from personal opinion.

Not too may "understand" that about you, Dave.
You have made many claims, even went as far as to say they were on the site, but I'm still waiting for you to illustrate these claims.

>I actually like the site, but I also understand >the feelings that pushed him to make it.

Apparently, you do not, as you claim it was not about censorship, which is very clearly what the site owner maintains.

And this was juts one of thousands and thousands of hits when I entered Delay comments and Schiavo into the search engine.,,yet, you maintain you can not find these comments anywhere.
Now Delay wants to move on, but those same crowds who refused to allow BC's indiscretions to pass are now refusing to allow Delay to move on. This issue gave way to a climate of fear for anyone enforcing the law that the religious extremist zealots oppose. Politicians who are willing to violate the law are becoming more commonplace, and this issue brought them out of the woodwork.

>Why should that bother you?

It's not about me, it's about what bothers the majority of the country and those who you maintained should be held to a higher standard than the rest of us. Judging by the polls, it bothers the majority of people, including the Bush base.

>You're the one who evokes "civil

That is your flawed perception. If you cared to look up the definition, you would find the term is defined as the act of refusing to obey certain laws for a specific reason.

>Which you use as a justification to ignore >everything from speed limits to freebanding.

Ha..I don't speed, but your unyielding failures and need to delibeately misattribute quotes to others has been beautifully demonstrated by yourself in this thread. Cooter Mae is getting up there in age and the wind in the bed of the truck now bothers her.
The comment concerning the fact about the Bush base disagreeing with the president moved you to the point of rapidly invoking what you erreoneoulsy perceive as my behavior, again, speaks volumes concerning your own insecurities regarding your little displayed knowledge of your party leaders.

Attacking another patriotic act

Only because your inability and stubborn refusal to learn the difference between civil and criminal acts and penalties. Once you actually comprehend the acts you redundantly refer to as "criminal" (dx, freeband) are civil, you may even come to understand such is what the term "civil' means in the term "Civil Dispobedience". You have demonstrated you have no clue or mechanism to allow you to distinguish between civil and criminal disobedience, acts, and penalties.

OK, I purchased the Imax-2000 which is a 5/8 wave antenna. There are 2 options for a ground plane kit:

1. First is a four fiberglass 6 foot radials, angled down (appears 45 degrees), as seen here:

2. This is another kit. It has four aluminum 7 foot radials. This is horizontal, and not angeled, as seen here:

http://www.majestic-comm.com/products/IMAGES/powersupply/Boomer

Which one would be better?

It's clear that Vinnie avoids both confrontation and education. But I didn't post the link for his benefit. I posted it because others might have the same or similar questions -- people who want to actually learn something so they don't need someone to hold their hand while installing an antenna.

that was a smack at him frank. his posts concerning his newfound amateur status was actually what this board is all about. Never mind its about an amatuer question but rather radio in general. He doesn't like you and the above post butresses his point. You are sounding like Eitner who is acidic also.

Both he, Twist & Frank do. The problem with politics is it's like religion, no matter what side of the fence you sit on, there will always be an opposite side that will have the same convictions.

Well, I talked to Riley Hollingsworth in person on March 22, and he did say to look for a lot more enforcement action in the future.

Riley also said that we should watch for stepped up enforcement action at the sources of the problem, namely importers and distributors of illegal radio equipment. Sorta puts the kibosh on keyclowns thinking that the laws would be changing.

And this is a country where you have the freedom to pursue both your

Well then, you now find yourself in a catch 22. You can't have it both ways. For you to insist that I am a liar based on your inability to find any information on the incident in Norristown, then you are a liar based on my inability to locate the "quote" you misattribute to

I entered your misatribbuted quote directly into google and came up with nothing. Zilch, zero, nada. I also cut out parts just to make the chanced of hits better, and still nothing resembling your "quote".

There's a difference between legitimate civil disobedience (Which usually affects a great number of like-minded people), and a simple act of lawlessness.

I was somewhat interested in our discussion that started with the FCC's actions against broadcast pirates. But little by little you have turned that discussion into one of, once again, personal attacks against my particular political leanings.

The plain truth is that you are free to believe anything you want to believe. But that alone falls far short of any sort of evidence that proves my political leanings "wrong".

You can go on and continue to blame all that is wrong in the world on G.W. Bush and his mythical band of "handlers". In reflection, that the left is so stirred up by this one man, that they froth all over themselves in public and in print, only makes me smile more.

Thanks for the link. That's a pretty good primer for what a filibuster is and how it's currently being abused, along with a look at how one organization is distorting the issue to sway public opinion. I would not want to see the filibuster completely eliminated. But I would favor a time limit on such, so that a 60 vote majority would not be required to override it. The filibuster was designed to promote further discussion of issues, not to obstruct the workings of congress

We vote on many issues in congress using a simple 51% majority. That is what the constitution provides. Using a filibuster so that the minority can leverage the majority is unconstitutional.

You should give Frank's suggestion a look as it does contain a lot of information on antennas.

But to answer your question, your particular type of antenna, like the
A-99, is designed to decouple with no radials. Adding radials to this type of antenna does very little to improve performance. It's more about marketing hype than actual performance improvement.

His post got piggy backed. What can I say about him. I could give two shits about him. I have clearly moved him though. He can't avoid me.

As far as education, Frank's parents clearly educated him in manner. o, I will not use his advice, because his education is the type that is of no use.

No chance. We habe nothing in common. Frank thrives on being an asshole. This post is a case in point. He could have simply just posted a link. But that is not his style. He has to be condescending, belittling, etc. And one thing is a common. His posts always contains a slap at your education, and plugs his own education. That smells of some type of inferiority complex. And he constantly points to Dave in comparison. One thin is for sure, Dave would have never answered this post in that manner. Like I said before. I don't he went from being an engineer to bartender, because of choice. It was because he can't get along with people, and was sent packing. He is a petty, miserable, fat old man.

I should have been clearer. I wasn't trying to improve performance, since it is a 5/8. But from the reading I have done (no thanks to anything Frank posted), I was simply seeing if thise would lower the angle of radiation, and reduce potential for any king of interference. I am sorry id my lack of knowledge in this field, insults Frank.

Don't worry about it dude, Geo's been doing this for 5 years now. Every time he posts, he shows what a troll he is with the obsession for Mopar & I. Making up names, false accusations, foul vulgar language just shows people how sick he really is.

Agreed. That was the whole point, everyone has the right to practice their religion and vote their politics. It's just no matter who you are, what you believe, their will be someone with an equal amount of the opposite beliefs.

The Imax is actually longer than 5/8 wave. Like .64 wave.

How far off the ground? The lower it is the more effective the radials are due to take off angle, the higher you get the less effective. I have heard use them if the feed point is less than 36 feet. My Imax is less than that and I have no radials. It performs VERY well. But new tower is being contemplated!!!!

Damn..... BuryFlex, Imax, Sounds like we have a lot of the same stuff !!!!!!

That goes both ways. Perhaps if you didn't put on the appearance of being somewhat bothered by those guys, they wouldn't be so quick to hassle you. Remember, they didn't come looking for you.

Like I said to Landshark, it takes two to tango. That was not meant as a criticism, just a neutral observation.

Well we all can't be masters of every facet of electronics and radio.
And those who are weren't always that way. Most of us learn a few things every day or so.

That being said, I'll have to look in the archives, but I recall a discussion some time back about exactly what you are proposing to do.
The consensus at that time, by those who seemed to be in the know on the topic, was that those type of "stick" end-fed radial-less 1/2 wave and 5/8th wave antennas were designed to not need radials, and adding them affects them very little in the areas that matter. The A-99 especially has poor decoupling which allows the feedline to radiate to some degree, which is why people claim that the antenna "bleeds".
Simply adding radials does not seem to affect the transformer decoupling all that much and doesn't really help the problem.

I don't know if the IMAX suffers from the same issues, but you might want to search around for some discussions on them. You might pick up some useful information.

Personally, I much prefer the "old fashioned" Sigma 5/8th style antenna with radials. Jay's Interceptor 10K antenna seems to be about the best thing going these days.

Not to be a smart ass or anything, but if you convert .64 into its fractional equivalent, what do you get?

I haven't installed it mostly because I haven't received an Alpha Delta dipole, which is on backorder, which I plan to hang at the same time. And since there is trench digging involved, there is no reason to dig 2 trenches, days or weeks apart. That and getting help to run and get tools or such, and putting them in a rope and bucket, so I don't have to climb down. Better to knock off 2 birds with one stone.

I plan on being about 40 feet at the feed. I just purchased the Imax yesterday. I never knew buying an antenna and asking questions about it, would absolutely piss off a bunch of people. I got one guy claiming I need my hand held. I got another guy claiming that I am only "thinking" of installing it. And then there is George and his sexual innuendo.

Should I return it? I think the purchase has affected too many lives?

Any time you add radials, especially the drooping type it will add a slight amount of gain. The added gain is most likely only a fraction of what the radial manufacturer will quote. The gain would be in the order of 1db. Hardly worth the cost and extra wind load.

I only have the desire to put up these 2. The Imax for CB and 10 meter, so I can talk to the locals, and the Alpha Delta for everything else. I have no interest in a beam. I have no interest in running 1,000 watts on my ham radio. I am somewhat interested in the "QRP" low power DX. I simply want to satify the same couriousity I had as a kid, that I have not done so in about 21 years. That is it. It is not that complicated. I had not picked up a CB, or a communications book, or antenna book, in over 21 years. This is why I am asking these questions. But apparently, this is some sort of crime, that needs criticizing and name calling.

That is basically what the manufacturer said. They also said it would have more affect on Receive, than anything else.

Probably. If you want a decent antenna that you can use for both CB
-and- ham you should check out that link for the $4 cheapie (that I provided in a post without insult). It will probably cost -you- about $20 more because it requires a tuner which you probably don't have.
The idea is to just throw a couple wires in the trees and load them up with the tuner -- that's it. It works better than any Imax or Antron, it can be used for whatever power and spectrum is handled by the tuner (usually 2-30 MHz), you can change the antenna at any time, you don't have to worry about SWR, it's cheap, and it's so easy even a Geico customer can do it.

Now.... are you going to take some sound technical advice? Or would you rather keep up with the crybaby routine?

It's not difficult, Dave. Just punch in the right keywords and scroll through the list. It doesn't take long to find a partial quote. Then do a search on the partial quote and up pops the whole transcript.

Maybe you didn't read the entire article, Dave. The filibuster wasn't "designed" -- it was an accident. The only reason it has never been remedied is because both sides want to keep the filibuster as a tool for when their party holds the minority, and therefore prevent abuse of the simple majority on important issues that probably should require a super-majority, such as the appointment of a Supreme Court Justice.

The fact is that Bush wants to push his judge through Congress, but he can't negotiate a deal because he's used up all his cards, and he's so desperate that he's willing to try to eliminate the filibuster. But he is so isolated from his own party that any vote to end the filibuster would probably be opposed by both Democrats -and- Republicans because they both want to -keep- the filibuster. Chances are that the stupid Democrats will block the vote with -- ironically -- a filibuster, thereby allowing the Republicans to save face and not look like they are opposed to Bush.

>We vote on many issues in congress using a simple 51% majority. That >is what the constitution provides. Using a filibuster so that the >minority can leverage the majority is unconstitutional.

Again, read the article. The filibuster can be used for both good and bad, depending on your point of view. Maybe you should read the Binder & Smith book that was referenced.

You sure about that Dave? They've posted numerous peoples us.

Of course, if you stopped responding to Twist & Frank this political crap would stop, but that was not meant as criticism, just a neutral observation ;)

Probably not even enough to tell. Not by your ears anyway. I had an Antron with their stupid gpk-1, or whatever they called it, and I saw no diff at all. As stated earlier in this thread, I did see a lot more wind load.

Wrong wrist flipping taxidermist, you get to take the package as it is delivered, not when you think you can deal with it. Only a fool would accept an adversary's terms. We'll play things our way. When you flip your wrist and whine over it you will then see that you were outmanuvered. Until then you still have no clue whats up, and we are smiling about that.

The bottom line is that nothing you have done or will ever do can stop the AKC. This has been proven over and over again, but your lust for same gender interplay clouds your thought process. You are an 8086 brain in a coppermine world.

It was killer as usual, Harvick did a great job coming from the rear to win..he won both races. (RCR must be cheating again) :)

Sterling got caught up in the 10 car rumble and his car looked like a crushed Coors can afterward, but he still managed an 11th place finish after going a lap down.

The campground was a mud pit after we got 2 inches of rain fri/sat. Had to use 4 wheel drive to pull the camper outta there. Mud everywhere!!

Why should I be nice? I -was- nice. We have had civil converstations, and I even gave him enough info to install the antenna in his attic, which apparently worked quite well. Then he stuck his finger into the political lion cage and turned into a sniveling crybaby after getting scratched.

As for being a general-class amateur, there are literally hundreds of hammie websites that cover nothing but antennas, not to mention the ARRL manual. If he's so serious about radio, why beg a CB group for info on how to install a prefab antenna? J.H.F.C, how did he pass the exam without knowing a few antenna fundamentals? And if part of the hobby is to learn about radio comm, why ask a CB group for tech info when there are countless resources available for hams? Isn't anyone elmering the kid?

LOL!!!! That would be a real cold day in Hell for you to start freebanding & running power, but I do believe your political convictions, just like Twist & Dave's. My point for Dave was, he makes the statement

"two to tango" and yet when Jim asks him when he's going to stop posting his political diatribes, Dave says
"You must have me confused with someone else. I don't post political diatribes".
Politics & Religion are a never ending debate, that's why I am going to stay out of that subject.

Sure, sure,,a "neutral" observation whose first knee jerk reaction when Dogie was busted was to jump to his defense and lie and say someone someone withdrew the complaint against him to the FCC. See Dave, when the FCC places a hammie on the Rain Report and informs the world they have evidence before them that indicates he was in violation of FCC law, and you come along and attempt to say otherwise and that the FCC could be wrong, is in no manner "neutral", It's simply another case (of many) where you are not in any remote sense of the word "neutral". The contingency recognizes this fact and several have illustrated and commented on your position and hypocrisy. The again, it is your right to insist on remaining detached from reality and refusing to view yourself as you really are, such as how others and the majority view you. You claiming the majority misunderstands you, via explaining what you "really" meant (usually accompanied by you applying incorrect definitions of words and terms) adds to the joke.

Come on, Jim. Vinny takes his own "smacks" at people, unprovoked. If you're gonna take one to task for "smacking" him, apply it evenly across the board and direct the proper redress.

(his posts concerning his newfound amateur status was actually what this board is all about. Never mind its about an amatuer question but rather radio in general. He doesn't like you and the above post butresses his point.)

Yet, Vinny expresses his own likes and dislikes in the same manner for which you are chastising Frank. Vinny's personal dislikes and likes are not any one elses problems except his own, yet he continues to foster them upon the group by redundantly invoking his imaginary killfile, fronting off by name those he "includes" in such, yet, unyieldingly while not surprisingly, is unable to control his actions. This is illustrated by him replying indirectly to those he claims are killfiled, by incorrectly claiming he reads their posts when they are quoted by another.

You usually are pretty ambivalent about getting involved in the pissing matches, but when you decide to do so, ignoring Vinny's unprovoked attacks and illustrating others he is involved with, takes away from your objectivity.

You saying he is not a bad guy is akin of me saying the same thing about Geo regarding his attacks on you, the nature of such unprovoked attacks notwithstanding. Did you miss Vinny blowing of his top? The guy came apart over a typo that had nothing to do with him...perhaps that was his malfunction for the day, but it shows the guy's true self and how he was moved by a simple posting of a url.
Maybe if it was you he attacked for no reason other than incompetence and inability to control his nasty nature, you would view things differently, such as you do with Geo.

Now,,I invoke to you the same exact reasoning you use for many of your complaints with Geo,,,,why would one attack another for no reason? Ask Vinny,,,he employed this exact tactic. Geo is no more obsessed with anything than Vinny is by continually speaking of his imaginary killfile. Thing is..Frank admitted many times what he is about,,Vinny has a weird penchant for camoflauge.

OK, I purchased the Imax-2000 which is a 5/8 wave antenna. There are 2 options for a ground plane kit:
1. First is a four fiberglass 6 foot radials, angled down (appears 45 degrees), as seen here:
2. This is another kit. It has four aluminum 7 foot radials. This is horizontal, and not angeled, as seen here:
http://www.majestic-comm.com/products/IMAGES/powersupply/Boomer
Which one would be better?

Yes there is, but your demonstrated failure to grasp the differences between civil matters and criminal matters results not only in your feckless claim that dxers and freebanders are federal criminals, but in your astounding inability to comprehend the differences of civil penalties vs criminal penalties. When you can understand this, you can only then begin to comprehend the astute differences between civil disobedience and criminal disobedience. Don't worry, Dave,,,your repeated intentional snipping of this education you much needed concerning this subject, tells us you are indeed learning, albeit reluctantly.

Not as much as I am...all the way to the gas pump. report last week said oil may reach over 100 bucks per barrel to us and that we are finally being brought in line with the prices other nations pay. Nevertheless, your flocked sheople mentality of clinging to the desperate belief that only the left has issues with the man, illustrates (again), you know little of what you speak concerning the party you choose to espouse. Of course, you illustrated such regrading your non-knowledge of what your party leaders are saying and doing (Delay comments). Not having the faculties to know how to locate such, and going on record as admitting such, in addition to the inability to distinguish between civil and criminal disobedience and judicial law, leaves no doubt whatsoever about your unsolicited and self-professed qualifications.

Horizontal radials work simply as a ground plane/counterpoise while radials that are angled down and out at a 45 degree angle combine the benefits of a counterpoise with a impedance matching network to lower the input impedance of the antenna to a more friendly 50~ output impedance of the transmission line......P.S. Hello to those of you that remember me from way back ans as for the rest of you that have ruined this newsgroup........well, goodbye

Interesting perspective..... so any argument about religion or

I want to use a mobile cb antenna on my house. I have mounting brackets and already have the power converted. I need a way to use my mobile 3/8 flex antenna outside and have an attiquate ground plane to keep my swr down. I saw a "tristar" on the internet which said it acted as a ground plane. I have not gotten an answer yet, but hopefully I will. I do not want to buy an no ground plane antenna because I will eventually move my old antenna to my truck when I get one. What can I use as a ground plane, and spending minimal amount of money.

Thanks in advance

If you can travel to a truck stop, I am sure they will have one. I did not search for your particular cb model, but I did have a realistic cb and it had a three pin power cord. I did a search real quick and found this website.

http://www.kenselectronics.com/lists/pwrcord.htm

I am sure that you can find which end it is an be able to buy it for a cheap price. I would recomend going to a truck stop.

Hope this helps,

Greg

Does anyone know a low cost source (other than ebay) for any EM27 spares (new or used) or any generic cb equipment? Trying to help kit out a local charity with my old EM27 rig but it needs a bit of attention to get it into a usable condition since I am missing everything bar the rig and mic. Would really like to source another EM27 as well (not much use to them just having the one) and a couple of aerials too but since i'm footing the bill myself I'm looking to do it at the lowest possible cost.

Many thanks

I was going to make it kind of mobile. If I want to use the cb, I would want to set it on the roof. I have no metal around my house except the garage door.

Don't know much bout cb retailers to be honest, been a few years since I first started up. What part of the country are you? I take it you are UK since you are posting in uk.rec.radio.cb.

I might be able to help you and your charity out a bit though. Got a small box of assorted bits and bobs left over from my CB'ing days that's been lying around the house gathering dust for some time. Been meaning to do something with it for a while. Anyhow, you're more than welcome to anything from there if it is of any use to you - email me (see sig) and I'll send you a quick list of it all and if you want any of it I'll drop it in the post.

Best of luck with it all, I hope you get some support from a few others too. CB could do with a few youngsters to keep it alive - if my old things can help prolong the life of the CB you're more than welcome to them.

I said I liked Reagan. Nothing more. I didn't try to outdo your political knowledge. In fact, showing the phony you truly are, you complimented me on the fact I hate Bush Jr. Now I am a sniveling crybaby. How quickly we forget. Dave was right that once you find out what politcal side of the once someone is on, is how you treat a person afterwards. Simply because I liked Reagan.

Need I remind you that you changed your ID to avoid my killfile, to get in one last jab. I pissed you off so bad, you were practically banging youre head against a wall.

Because knowing antenna theory in full, is not a requirement for ham or CB. It's a good thing you don't make the rules.

Exactly. A few fundementals.

>>And if part of the

Because the Imax, is for my CB, and this is a CB group.

You and Lancer are coming out smelling like roses here. You 2 epitomize this newsgroup in it's old form. I simply ask a couple questions regarding a ground plane. Nothing more. There was no politcal tone, not finger pointing, nothing.

You had to come on, and rip me a new asshole. Remember when you asked me why I didn't take Dave Hall to task for the same reasons, I took you? Well, here it is. Let everyone see what kind of person.

As far as Lancer, I don't know what is up his ass. I don't know him from a hole in the wall, but from some reason, he cracks on me like I fucked his wife or something. Making comments about how I "think" about installing an antenna, or cracking because I won't build one from scratch. All because I asked about a ground plane question in a CB newsgroup.

Keep it up, both of you. Keep it going. Let everyone on this newsgroup see you for who you truly are.

Frank, while you are at it, get me a beer. And Lancer, I didn't fuck your wife, nor anyone of your family, nor do I know wnyone in your family. So when you want to tell eveyone here why you hate me so much, please do so. I sure eveyone is curious.

Greg,

Let me answer you because someone will most likely start mocking you at some point. I just stuck a 6 foot Firestik in the attic. This information comes from advice I got here. Most of the people here agree on 9 foot wire or tube. Wire is cheaper, tube is easier. Use a minimum of 3 radials, preferably 4. I might have pictures if you want them (I have to look). The only problem with wire is it is not rigid, and you have to tie it down. If you have some old copper tubing, or such that would work. But don't buy it, it's expensive. I guess some Romex wire would be rigid enough.

This setup worked well for me for some DX. I hit Mexico, Alabama, on it. Didn't work great for locals. I am in the country. If you are in the city, or suburbs, you might do better for locals. So because of that, I am getting ready to install an Imax.

The only reason I might do it, is because it will be much much easier to install now, than after it's up. I can't do anything until I get that dipole. I don't feeling like doing to trenches and 2 installs. Might as well do it once.

I was kidding. But how dare I ask a CB antenna question in a CB newsgoup. Of all the nerve ! This is not the place for it. Especially because I liked Reagan !!!!

I really don't care if you liked him or not. I liked the guy myself at the time. He came across as a strong leader. But the more I learned about him and his secret and illegal antics the more I changed my perspective.

So I'll explain this once again: I made my comments about Reagan because I thought you were a reasonable person and maybe didn't know just how shady his administration really was. Then you threw a fit and have been whining about it ever since. So what other conclusion can I draw other than you are not a reasonable person?

Who said that you should learn "antenna theory in full"? If you are going to put up an antenna and don't know if it requires a ground plane or not, then wouldn't it be a good idea to learn the basics of how the thing works? .....oh, that's right, you -do- know how an antenna works because you passed the written for the General.

I can't speak for Lancer, but I know there are many people who think that people should do their -own- homework. It's just plain lazy for you, a General Class amateur, to hop on a CB group and ask if your antenna needs a ground plane, especially when you can take five minutes to learn -by yourself- what they are, what they do, and whether your antenna needs one or not. Did you even read the instructions that came with the antenna? Sheesh.

That will make a 'resonant' groundplane, better known as a 'counterpoise'. You can make a 'non-resonant' groundplane that will work even better by making the wires as long as possible. And they do not need to be the same length -- in fact, it's better if they aren't.

The groundplane radials do not need to be rigid. In fact, they don't even need to be straight.

Vinnie, you local performance is poor because your take-off angle is high. Your take-off angle is high because you didn't follow my instructions to make the radials as long as possible.

Greg, here's the link I provided when Vinnie asked his groundplane question:

http://www.bencher.com/pdf_download.html

Scroll down to "Tech Notes" at the bottom. Those five files have just about everything you want to know about groundplanes.

1333. Power levels?

So, are you guys who do DX on CB... what power levels do you use? 4W AM, or 12W SSB? When the skip is in, how far do you get on 4W AM vs. 12W SSB (assuming a nice big antenna on your roof)? How about when the skip isn't real good?

Just curious...

Twist, I'm not going to go around with you on this. I'm sure just like Mopar & Frank, things got off to a bad start, hopefully in the future things will be better, though one of them most likely have to breakdown and bury the hatchet.

Frank has a very condescending type of tone, but unfortunately when typing one can't tell the "tone" of the type if they haven't been around it for a while.

If I were to do, as Twist naively suggested, and put in the words

Abuse of the simple majority? That's what the constitution calls for on many of these votes. A filibuster is a way to circumvent the wishes of the constitutional framers. You've claimed to be someone who upholds the letter of the constitution. You should, if anyone, understand this. If, for whatever reason the consensus of the majority of citizens believe that the constitution should be changed to super-majority votes for many issues, then the constitution should be amended to reflect that.

Bush is not the one pushing this. Opposition of the obstructionist politics of filibustering democrats comes straight from congressional republicans. I'm sure Bush is in favor, but he can't do much about it.

You are so far off the mark on this one, you should stop right now.

They're not. Congressional republicans are the ones talking about the "Nuclear Option" and other such fillibuster-busting issues.

I did (again). It is irrelevant the intent or motive of the filibuster. That it obstructs the normal workings of congress is the issue. One that flies in the face of the constitution.

Yea, 1,300,000 examples using only "Delay" and "Schiavo". Maybe you

Where did I ever say that you guys started it? I never made any such insinuation. But at this point it really doesn't matter who started it. But truth be told, it won't ever stop as long as BOTH sides continue to pour gas on the fire. That's what I meant when I said "it takes two to tango". I agree with you that the whole thing is childish. I can't believe that Stevo would actually go to the trouble of driving over to "Doug's" over an internet issue. He risked a potential trespassing or assault charge all over an internet dispute. That reminds me of the arguments and challenges to fights that used to happen over the CB years back. I learned back then that if a hobby got that serious, that it was time to take a break from it. The cyber world and the real world should never cross unless it's on mutually good terms.

You guys should just resolve to conclude that the guys hassling you are not worth your trouble. You guys are better than that.

I don't recall anyone's correct addresses and phone numbers being posted. There was a lot of speculation and accusations IIRC. But that alone is not worth a grain of salt. But hell, my address is in the FCC license database, as is "Doug's" and "George's", assuming they really are who you claim.

So you contend that I am the only reason those guys post political crap on this board? Do you really think I'm that important?

But assuming you are correct, I'm not complaining about Twist and Frank posting political stuff, as off the wall and conspiracy laden as it might be. If the day comes that I do complain, you are cordially invited to remind me that it takes two (or three in this case) to tango. ;-)

Welcome to the unwashed world of the internet. Since everyone is comfortable behind their keyboards, there is no incentive for anyone to be the least bit polite. So for anyone to remain here, you have to learn to become hardened to that type of behavior. Some people truly want to exchange ideas. Other people are only interested in "tweaking" people for the pure entertainment value. I admit that I get a certain amount of pleasure tweaking Twisty, as his responses are so predictable.

If I started caring about the people who didn't like me and the reasons why, I would have left here long ago. I'm especially suspicious of the motives of people who take deliberate steps to hide their identity. In many ways, I'm just like Frank. The difference is that I don't get flippant with other people until they do so to me first. I give everyone the benefit of the doubt initially. It's hard to exchange ideas with people if everyone is pissed off at each other.

There are a lot of ham appliance operators. While it smacks at the original intended purpose of the service, there's nothing expressly prohibited about it. There are also those guys who are subject matter experts on one facet of the hobby, and who know very little about others. Such is the nature of such a multi-faceted service.

A few things.

First off, despite what this group has devolved into in the last few years, it originally was a place to discuss experiences with different aspects of radio. It's one thing to read a 2-dimensional book about a subject. It's another thing to actually talk with people who have "been there and done that". Tapping that experience is far more rewarding than generalized book comments.

I would also be skeptical about the antenna's instructions. The company has a pecuniary interest in promoting "accessories" which have questionable value from a performance standpoint.

Remember that the paper never refuses ink. Just because something is printed in a book, does not mean that it is 100% true, or accurate in all cases.

My hat's off to Vinnie for trying to at least swing the discussions back to radio related topics, as opposed to the sniping and bickering over politics and who's gay.

A tuner-fed non-resonent length dipole is not the best solution for CB. It is woefully inefficient and would be the wrong polarity for the majority of CB work. They worked well on the ham bands because most H.F contacts are DX in nature and you're relying on atmospheric propagation to do most of the work. Try to work another ham 30 miles away on the H.F bands and it is surprising how difficult it can be with those wire antennas.

I ran a home brewed wire dipole on CB years ago, and used it in addition to my main 5/8th wave antenna. While the dipole worked well when the skip was running, locally, the signal from the dipole was a few "S" units less than the ground plane. With 4 watts of power, you don't get much range on a horizontal wire dipole strung in a tree.

For ham band use, I agree with you, just not for CB.

We will introduce ourselves at the camp ground, mopeydopey. We are not interested in any male to male actvities, so do not get excited.

Poor little mopeydopey, can't stop the AKC from doing a thing. It would sure be a bummer to be a wrist flipping keyclown like you. Why don't you stay home from the truckstops, get yid of that dog yer ole lady got, and start trying to NOT be such a winged wand carrier and taxidermist?

Wrist flipper cwys and cwys in fwustration. As usual, wrist flipper just gets laughed at. Poor widdle keycwon boy.

Izzat so? Well, then you will have a chance to hide, since you think you know whats up. You have fallen spectacularly, dopeymopie...and it is a real laugh to watch. We notice that in your sissy reply you made no mention of the fact that nothing you do can stop the AKC. That's the bottom line, not your garbage, punk.

What fun it is to know that even now you don't have a clue whats going on around you. When you find out it will have already been known to almost everyone else.

Nothing you can do will stop the AKC, nothing. That is your entire reason for this impotent, wrist flipping rage. Must be bad to be completely unable to cause any change at all in something you just can't stand. It would be awful to be as sissy and frustrated as you are. For YEARS now, you have said you were gonna stop this and gonna stop that. ALL of your words have turned out to be BS. That's all this last post is too. You know it because look how you writhe and squeal like a stuck hog in your agony over being so impotent.

Writhe, cry, threaten, forge, whine, curse...whatever. You are to this day not one inch closer to stopping the AKC than when you foolishly decided to try. You know it and it eats you up. We know it and it cracks us up.

The simple fact is that you are a stupid, sissyboy, wrist flipping keyclown who cannot stop the AKC. That's the truth and you can't take it. That is all this is about. You spoiled baby, crying at age 4 for candy and toys at wal mart. Crying now because of being trained to cry for your way from childhood. That's all you are doing and everyone knows it but you.

You can't take it, mopeydopey, keyclown boy. You can't take it.

Did -I- hide when I introduced myself to you in person? NO! -YOU- were the one hiding, you fish hooked spined weakling. I will never hide from the likes of you...quite the contrary, I've experienced first hand what a fucking coward you are, and expect the same from you in May.

I'll have people there to make sure it's just you and I, felon-boi.

How do you propose I 'stop the AKC (another keyboard coward) from acting like a retarded fool. I coudn't care less about that.

Now it's down to doug vs steve and I've seen what you're all about. I honestly feel sorry for you and the consequences you're about to experience. Remember, you asked for it.

There's really not been much extra effort so far. I had to go to Flat Rock Michigan for some Mopar parts from a friend of mine up there the last time I visited the felon. I'm going to do some radio gear shopping in Dayton in May, so once again I'll be in the neighborhood.

A guy like Doug needs mental help real bad, I almost feel sorry for him.

Oh? What consequences am I to experience, wrist flipper? Cramp in the side from laughing too hard? Sore jaw muscles from grinning?

Face it, there's nothing you can do. Not one single thing. Poor dopeymopey, can't change a thing.

By the way, as for you "feeling sorry", I quite agree. You are sorry. Not apologetic, but for sure sorry. Come on gutless forge boy, tell us all how your frustrated self is gonna do this and do that. You know you aint, but it makes you feel better.

As for it being down to Doug and Steve, you sick gutless freek...Steve is not your name. Whine all you want, keyclown. You have provided endless amusement for many people, so we don't want ya to stop.

Greets.

I drive across country twice a year in an '02 Toyota Camry. I was thinking that this time (next month), it might be fun to get a CB for the trip.

I've been away from radio for ~20 years so I have no clue on current gear. I don't want an expensive, in-dash installation. But I don't want a junker portable either. And what's the best solution for an antenna these days (I know that makes a huge difference in performance)? Roof magnetic? Trunk magnetic? Something else? Obviously, I'd prefer not to have some rinky-dink thing that plugs into the cig lighter, runs a wire through a permanently open window to a badly matched (horrible SWR) magnetic roof mount and gets horrible reception, etc.

Suggestions appreciated.

Umm,,this is where your failed memory comes into play, Davie. Go TYVM. You came right out and said it,,there was no "insinuation".

Not to you, because you support those who began it. This was illustrated when the FCC busted Dogie and told the world via the Rain Report he was breaking FCC rules by jamming. YOU, came on here and offered incompetent armchair lawyering on Dogie's behalf, conjuring and lamenting to the group that someone withdrew the complaint against Dogie....all AFTER the fact the FCC reported him as jamming repeaters.

LOL..and many others can not believe an extra class hammie such as yourself, who continually self-qualifies himself as some type of knowledegable person regrading the laws that govern his hobby, would erroneously continue to claim dxers and freebanders are federal criminals, and not be able to comprehend the definition of civil disobedience verses criminal disobedience and all that pertain to such. Nevertheless, your education has been completed on this subject, as you were reduced and forced to admitting your views holding dxers as federal criminals all comes down to matter of perception (yours), which happens to be wrong (as illustrated by the US judicial system as to what differentiates civil verses criminal courts, actions, and penalties.)

You address is wrong, Dave. You have yet to provide the FCC with the correct address of where you lay your head at night.

A "neutral" observation is not possible from one who claimed Dogie's FCC bust was recanted by a complainant who turned him in. This, in addition to the rest of your mess, shows you know shit about the law. When the FCC tells the world a hammie is guilty, their evidence regarding the hammie breaking the law is practically iron-clad.

Not everyone takes your personal complaining of Frank and myself as "off the wall" and "conspiracy laden"....that's your paranoia acting up..it just seems like everyone thinks that of you.

It doesn't really matter what is responsible for your years and years of complaints concerning illegal radio activity, as you are in denial it ever occurred. the House, among other things.

Crawl out of your bunker, Dave -- the Bush administration is clearly the motivating force behind the proposal because he has too many issues coming up that are going to be facing a filibuster, such as the impending Supreme Court vacancy, the renewal of the Patriot Act, etc, etc. And since it's the intention of Rove to establish a permanent Republican majority, the elimination of the filibuster is the next logical step towards that objective.

How is the filibuster unconstitutional, Dave? It doesn't obstruct the normal workings of Congress -- it is -PART OF- the normal workings of Congress. If it were unconstitutional it would have been repealed 200 years ago!

The 11-meter band is very fickle. When skip is rolling, you can hear just about anything that puts out a couple watts. When DX is dead, it's dead regardless of how much power you run. For local chatter, legal power for SSB is almost ideal because if you can hear a station, you can usually hit it with 12 watts SSB.

He exercised an optional choice to attack a poster as opposed to the

he was moved by a simple posting of a url. Maybe if it was you he attacked for no reason other than incompetence

>Maybe, but I have been the target so long, as >you, It really doesn't bother to much anymore.

It never bothered me. In fact, once I realized how much energy these type devote to causes of which they are impotent, it became not just entertaining, but amusing because of the control they willingly but not consciously give up. In fact, those who go as far as to actually place blame on other usenet particapants as the cause of their personal woes, all share the same characteristics. Dogie blames Moped for his problems, Geo blames you, and Dave blames me. While Geo seems to be more of a loner, Dave and Dogie actually -look- to others for support. Such is recognized by their deliberate misattributing quotes (Dave) to others, lies (the three of them, including Lelnad) and the invocation of un-named and unsolicited sources as supporting their positions (Dave and Dogie).

>I suppose if that was the case, but I don't see

>Why would Doug, Geo, Frank (in the past),

>Dave among others do the same to you?

>Because they didn't like you're ideology?

>Freebanding? political views? our were they >just plain trolling?

Ok. Since you asked, I'm going to spill some beans, here. Doug lost control when he came on here. When it was found that he had real problems of the mind, I immediately backed off my responses to him. It's not fair and it's not right to hit a child because they hit you. A simple reprimand every once in a while is sufficient. Mopar handles that quite well. In fact, the mere fact that Mopar handles Dogie as he does, is testament how serious he takes Dogie's threats.
  Frank?.....well, Frank and I went around concerning the legality issue. Now that the dx is much more sporadic and less, I'm more legal than Dave or Leland. After a few emails, I found Frank to be not that different from myself regarding certain key life skills, education. Even when we disagreed, I could learn something from Frank, as he was at least consistent with all his positions. Dave, otoh, has self-contradicted himself so many times and is known on this group by the majority as a major hypocrite. Such instantly compromises whatever integrity he managed to retain, which, after taking his posts concerning the defense of Dogie into consideration, is zero.

>Twist, I'm not going to go around with you on

,,,,why would one attack another for no reason?
>Frank has a very condescending type of tone,

>but unfortunately when typing one can't tell the "
>tone" of the type if they haven't been around it >for a while.

That's another parallel. Frank went as far as to come out and say "I'm an asshole" on occasion. Way back during my infancy of arrival, I stated I do not play well with others, do not much care what others think for the most part, and work better alone. This leads to self-created problems for a certain type of personality when they encounter people such as Frank or myself, especially when they possess a controlling personality, an unquenchable yearning and hunger for status, and are used to most people in their world deferring to them. Dave falls into this category. He speaks of other's feelings being hurt because -his- feelings are hurt. He projects and regurgitates all over usenet, just as he did in trying to say he never blamed anyone for the Dogie/Geo mess. He most certianly has, on many occasion, and has used the legality/illegality as his excuse to act the fool.

Lelnad,,well, his hatred of cb is well documented, yet he remains here for the education. If that isn't enough, his unprovoked attacks against dxers (Nebo comes to mind immediately, just for starters) confirms his agenda.

There are those who have perfectly acceptable beefs concerning legalties and illegalities. The beefs belonging to the type of which I speak, are personal. Vinnie appears to be in this category. I base this opinion only on HIS comments and continual unprovoked attacks and responses to those he somehow feels are in his killfile. Nevertheless,.....

>Cracking on me and my family Vinnie?

Right. I remember perfectly well. That was because you cracked on my because I quoted the Firestik website as th antennas being an electrical 5/8. You made a snide comment, finished off by an LOL. You could have simply said the website was innaccurate. But no. You have to make the comment. The only thing I questioned was why that made you laugh out loud. And I said if that made you laugh so hard, you family gatherings must be a blast.

It will be sunday. AKC will be in your home area on Sat. Bring yer ole lady too, and her dog. Very funny how you still aint said where yer gonna be, wristflipper.

Remember, you take it how it gets delivered, the only rule is that you don't make any. Your sissy self is a pathetic mewling pustule of idiocy.

The only fair fight is when you win, dum dum...don't expect people to act like you think they should. There isnt enough sissy in every other sissy on earth to make up 1% of the sissiness in you, so we couldnt if we wanted to.

Come on dopeymopey, ya tardboy wristflipper...tell us where yer gonna be and what vehicle to look for. Also, tell us what we are going to "experience" from you? Come on you turd with legs and a mouth, speak like a good trained keyclown.

We see how you ignored the true statement that it cant get down to Doug and Steve since your name isn't Steve. We see how you whine and cry, like you did as a kid in WalMart, whining for toys and candy.

The fun part is knowing whats gonna happen in advance, and knowing you don't.

Um, no. First, I will quote you:

"First of all, learn to quote:

So, I will quote:

"LOL! Looks like the same e-mail that firestick sent to me when I told them they didn't have a 6 foot 5/8 wave antenna.

A 5/8 wave antenna a feedpoint impedance of about 150 - j600 ohms.

Now if you think that will match your CB, hey more power to you.

There it is. An exact quote. I am glad you taught me to quote. In any case, that

Yep, that's usually the end result dogie, and after seeing you in person there's no doubt it will be the end result again.

Bring all your wares too...we're gonna have a dogie pound mess before it's all said and done.

Bring lelnad too, I want to introduce him to my friend "Rude". hehehe

Hey Moped, you are a pretty good size for our over-30 baseball team. We play in a wood bat league. Can you pitch? Better yet, can you look mean and ugly, and pitch? You could be our Gossage !!!! We need a friggin closer. Our starters are out of gas after 7 innings.

A search for "delay" and "schiavo" gets 1,300,000 hits. Five of the first ten hits referenced the remarks by Tom DeLay.

A search for "tom delay" and "schiavo" gets 553,000 hits. The first Nope. And I was in Bethlehem today. And I am in Allentown quite often. I cover the eastern part of PA. But he is shit to me. He means nothing in my life. I won't go look for him, and waste my time. He issued the the challenge. I never issued an challenge to meet him. He came on this board, and put his challenge on the archive, and said he was going to take pictures of my antennas, and post them. There is no way he can do that, the way my property is laid out. He would physically have to go onto my property. And once he does that he is fair game. And since all this is in black and white, and I know his call sign, the FCC has the evidence they need.

Believe me. I have nothing to worry about.

I've got a radio shack TRC - 452 (1980s model) 40 channel AM Mobile CB.
I'm running a Wilson Li'l Wil Mag Mount on my 98 Jeep Cherokee Laredo. (may upgrade to Wilson 500 or 1000)

I have a Uniden Grant XL but it needs new Rf coils and retuning and alignment.

It's in great physical shape.

Who says? Where in the rule book does it say that buying an antenna is the quickest way to get on the air? It doesn't, and I'll tell you why it doesn't -- because it's wrong. You can make a quick & dirty antenna that works pretty darn good with nothing more than coax. Just strip 9' of outer insulation, pull back the shield over the rest of the coax, and =-presto-= you have a coaxial dipole. Hang it high or hang it low, the match won't be too bad after you trim it, and it works better than a 5' Firestick on the raingutter.

>Snipped the rest of the useless babble.

Ok, so you have chosen to do the crybaby routine. Go for it. I'm sure Dave will lend a sympathetic ear since he's always looking for another co-dependent relationship.

Actually, I am not. Just not right now. I just want to get on the air, as soon as possible, hopefully by the end of April. I just got into this hobby, and have barely been in it a month. Most of it just studying code and Tech books. I didn't even study for General, but passed it anyway. I failed the extra. I plan on getting into the hobby full blast, and am interested in QRP. I know little about that. I kind of like the idea of lower power DX. It will feel like when you were a kid, talking to a CB station on a toy walkie talkie. I think QRP require home brews.

But as I said, I just want to get on the air. At least to learn the lingo a bit. My mind was kind of fried from the studying, so I want actually hands on. Once I can master that, we'll go the next step.

N3CVJ asked:
When have I ever been hypocritical?

>you wrote all of the following

And who would they report them to? The FCC has already shown time and time again that they have better things to do than worry about out-of-band CBers. I was involved in the DFing of a local 2 meter repeater jammer a few years back. We found him in short order, even though he was using a HT. He was reported to the FCC, and they sat on their laurels. Not until the SAME GUY was found causing malicious interference to the local police and fire frequencies, did the FCC finally get off of their collective butts and do something. After it was all said and done, the guy got what amounted to a wrist slapping. The point is, don't expect the feds to help rid the airwaves of Freebanders. And any ham that tries to "take the law into his own hands" will most likely end up full of lead......

I want to put this to rest once and for all. It seems that many of our ham friends here, have used the excuse that "I can work the world with 1 watt, so YOU don't need an amplifier". Well, lets set the record straight:
Misleading statement: " I can work the world with 1 watt". Facts: You can work the world with 1 watt, IF the ionospheric conditions are proper AND you are on a suitable frequency band. You CANNOT do it anytime you want, you are at the mercy of mother nature. Secondly, what most of these QRP guys have also failed to meantion, is that their "working of the world" was most likely via the CW mode. CW, because of its narrow bandwidth, offers excellent signal to noise ratios, easily 10 db better than a typical CB. If a CW contact were running 1 watt, and they were at your noise threshold, they would need to jump to 10 watts to make the same contact on AM. These "fantastic" claims aren't worth a nickel on the CB band, where most of us just wand RELIABLE (Meaning at ANY time) communications with other LOCAL stations.

I take offense to the "holer than thou" attitude displayed by many hams toward Cbers. They flaunt their "superior equipment" and tell the CBers, to get ham licenses, and then are the first to complain to their ham buddies, that the reason the ham bands are going to pot, is because of all the CBers that are moving up there.
Ham radio and CB radio are both communications services. Both offer their respective users with a forum for enjoyment. Each service has it's own unique appeal that is not duplicated on the other.

Ham radio is full of serious discussions and one can learn alot from just listening. On the other hand though, a constant diet of technobabble gets VERY boring fairly quickly. CBers are less technical, and as a result, are more like talking to "regular" people. Topics are more varied, and you can "fool around" without fear of upsetting the "kilocycle kops", and have more fun.

Roof magnetic is ideal, for temporary setups. I use it because I frequent parking garages, and need to remove it. Also, my car is a company lease vehicle, and I really can't drill holes. Uniden make some nice CBs, if you just want to use channel 19. Get a hump mount with a speaker.

As far as the antenna, both the K40 and Wilson 1000 are excellent for magnetmounts, if you plan to go barefoot. I got the same results with both. The Wilson handles power better. Anything close to 100 watts or more, go with the Wilson. Both come with permanent mounts, if you plan on drilling.

Clean kitchen, but I too have had suspicions about some of the "meats". Hey, ya gotta pay attention at any restaurant that serves Rocky Mountain Oysters.....

I'm thinking of making a grill-guard for the truck with them. Some idiot took out my roo-guard last month -- that brings my "hit count" to 17, not including the garage. Do people drive that bad in Ohio?

"Funny Farm". Hilarious movie! But I think those were sheep balls (like the difference is really important.....).

Nothing for nothing Vinnie but if you got your ticket why are you asking questions concerning amateur matters in the cb forum? Granted there are some very knowlegable folks here but did you try any other usenet groups?

I didn't. I asked about the Imax and the ground plane. Both are CB questions.
The only time I asked about a dipole, was to run one in my attic, for my CB. And that led to the Firestik in the attic. I haven't asked a ham question since I asked about the test info. I didn't ask a question about the ham dipole. I just said I ws waiting on getting one so I didn't have to dig 2 trenches. I know plenty of hams to ask question on the ham antennas. But none of them are on CB, nor familiar with the Imax.

I think -I'm- the magnet. The Dart I drove in college was hit 5 times, the LTD got hit twice before it was totalled, the S-15 was rear-ended by an ambulance, the LeBaron was hit three times in two weeks, etc.
I've had the S-10 for two years and it's been hit twice -- both times while it was parked! All in Spokane. Fortunately, I've only been hit once when I had a passenger, and that was the ambulance wreck so at least there was help available if someone got hurt.

Ok, I'm stepping off the soap box now.....

Yea, Saturday was downright miserable, it went down below freezing at

Oh, stop it. You act like you live in the sandpile or something.

MIAMI (AFP) - Florida's legislature has approved a bill that would give residents the right to open fire against anyone they perceive as a threat in public, instead of having to try to avoid a conflict as under prevailing law.
 Outraged opponents say the law will encourage Floridians to open fire first and ask questions later, fostering a sort of statewide Wild West shootout mentality. Supporters argue that criminals will think twice if they believe they are likely to be promptly shot when they assault someone.
Republican Governor Jeb Bush, who has said he plans to sign the bill, says it is "a good, commonsense, anti-crime issue."
Current state law allows residents to "shoot to kill if their property, such as their home or car, is invaded by an unknown assailant."
But it also states that if a resident is confronted or threatened in a public place, he or she must first try to avoid the confrontation or flee before taking any violent step in self defense against an assailant.
The bill, supported by the influential National Rifle Association, was approved by both houses of the Republican-run legislature on Tuesday.

Well, if you don't want a dash install, you've got the Midland 75-822, which is probably one of the rinky-dink cigarette lighter radios you mention. There's also the Cobra "HH Roadtrip" which is basically a handheld that comes with a magmount kit to let you put the antenna on your roof. But that's probably another rinky-dink radio.

Or you could just throw any mobile radio on the passenger seat or floorboard.

Uniden PRO-510, PRO-520 or something close to it. Really good modulation even in stock form. Just don't ever let anyone clip any modulation parts or you'll toast the audio chip. The resistor that sets it can be changed to a slightly different value for a little more modulation but try it stock first.

I picked up a Cobra HH34 that needs repair to the antenna terminal. I haven't been able to get it apart. I took out the 4 obvious screws and got the back off. Something is still holding the circuit board in the front housing. Anyone know how to take these things apart?

I've heard of 20,000 watts but I think 200 - 1000 watts is common. On SSB,
I've talked around the world on 12 watts.

>By Chase Squires

St. Petersburg- The Pirate Radio Broadcaster calling himself Bob Noxious is temporarily off the air, claiming he had to shut down after federal agents banged on his apartment door last week and began asking agents about his on-air antics.
Noxious (not his real name), has been running an illegal station since January with a range extending about 5 miles from downtown St. Petersburg on 99.9 FM. He said Tuesday that he did not open his door when federal Communications Commission agents came to his apartment. He said he was not served with papers or formally notified of any pending charges, but said the agents identified themselves to neighbors.
Broadcasting without a license is a federal and state crime*. An FCC spokesperson declined to comment. Noxious said rather than risk his equipment to federal seizure, he has hidden it, vowing to return to the airwaves in about two weeks.
A fundraising benefit for Noxious' Pirate Radio Network is set for 3-7 PM April 24 at the Globe Coffee Lounge, 532 First Avenue N., St Petersburg. Globe owner JoEllen Schilke, who hosts an arts show on community radio station WMNF-88.5 FM, said she supports Noxious' right to broadcast. "The people own the airwaves, thats ours," she said. "The government controls it, and then gives it away to corporations."
The bands Fall on Purpose, Can't Do It, Car Bomb Driver, Burning Tree and Ryan Yoho are slated to perform. Donations will be collected during the show.

*As relates to the commercial portion of the spectrum.

There's nothing stupid about it. I cut and pasted his quote and came up with nothing. I then tried parts of the quote, and came back with little unrelated sites, and blog-referenced comments. THEN he chimes in with the "Just enter Schiavo and Delay". Well, first off "Delay" is not only a proper name in this case, it's also a verb, and the combination of the two produced over 1.3 million hits. At that point I wasn't about to sift through them as the search parameters were not fine enough. I don't have the time to spend.

Twist made the claim, it's up to him to provide the source.

Then I guess you should join those who agree with you to push this as an amendment. In the meantime, the current rules should stand and use of a filibuster is little more than an attempt by the minority to hold the senate hostage. I can understand your concern with preserving the voice of the minority, but I draw the line when the minority can hijack the wishes of the majority. That's the main reason why Wilson passed the "cloture" limit for filibustering.

It's wrong no matter who does it. The last time republicans did this to this level, was in 1968, in the matter of Abe Fortas.

There may be some republicans who are hesitant to support this out of fear of political fallout. But anyone who wishes that the government continue should support the modification of such an obstructionist policy such as the filibuster.

It's not defined in the constitution. You said it yourself, it was an accident.

No, it's not a normal working of congress, it is an attempt to halt the workings of congress. It is obstructionism, pure and simple. It's the minority kicking a screaming that they can't have their way, and via their tantrum, prevent the majority from furthering senate business.

> If it were unconstitutional it would have been repealed 200
>years ago!

You can't repeal something that was never codified in the first place.

First off, the first major use of a filibuster was not until 1841. It was tolerated at the time. When they became more popular, in 1917 limits were placed on it, which was tested in the 1919 Treaty of Versailles filibuster. Further limits were imposed in 1975, which dropped the "super majority" down to 60 from 67 votes.

Yea, but a serious FCC engineer can D.F. on his transmitter in a

Did you like me better back then?

But how is that hypocritical? I still PERSONALLY feel that way. But I also recognize the letter of the law, and the penalties that go with violating it.

You like to accuse me of confusing civil and criminal issues. But you still can't seem to differentiate someone's personal opinion, from a matter of fact and law.

Both of these statements are true:

If you freeband you are a federal lawbreaker.

I personally don't care if you do.

Does anyone know which regulator circuit supplies the voltage that makes the numerals on the LCD display appear faint or dark against the backlight of the display on the Galaxy Saturn Turbo or who sells an accurate schematic? The RCI 2990 schematic appears to be slightly different though the two radios look to be the same!

Yep. you're alright, it's the rest of the world that's crazy.

Once again, your inability to comprehend subtleties combined with your confusion of which of your "bad guy of the day" said what, has you so befuddled, you make erroneous accusations of others, and then call them hypocrites when they correct your mistakes.

A dipole is a dipole. It has 0 db of gain, and that assumes a resonant dipole . If the dipole is non-resonant and requires a tuner to force an impedance match, it will have further losses. It won't stand a chance against a commercially produced (or home made if you are so-inclined) 5/8th wave vertical (with proper radials, not an Imax).

I find that very hard to believe, assuming identical height and conditions, as my own experiences prove otherwise.

Yea, if you're talking local. For DX, horizontal is usually better for a number of reasons, most notably a lower noise floor and better take off angle.

> Like I said
>before, just throw some wire up into the trees (or whatever tall >object happens to be available). Didn't you read the link I posted?

Of course. But a dipole is a basic antenna. It has no gain. A properly made purpose built CB antenna will out perform it.

Let's look at this from a practical standpoint. If a non-resonant, tuner fed dipole worked so well, then why aren't all CB'ers using one? Why would people want huge 5/8th wave antennas then? Better tell Jay to forget about selling his Interceptor, since a simple non-resonant dipole will work just as well and for far less money.

A non-resonant dipole has ONE big advantage. It's a compromise antenna that will work on all the HF bands. That's great if you don't have the room to put up single band antennas for each band. But like any compromise, it will not work as well as a dedicated antenna for each band. Such a compromise is usually acceptable for a ham who has 1500 watts on tap. But for a 4 watt CB'er, who needs to squeeze every watt of ERP he can for best local range, he needs a high gain efficient antenna.

>What's the name of that tech school, Dave?

What's your call sign Frank?

Frank, your experience with both ham and CB radio is sorely lacking. You read a few books and web sites and think you have all the answers. OTOH, I've walked the walk for the last 30+ years and have played with more antennas and equipment than I can remember. I have also been in contact with people in the know when it comes to antennas. What I know, I know through experience, and that's worth 10X what you read in any book.

The only thing "bizarre" is your inability to comprehend simple complaint. I made no such statement. That's a lie on your part, predicated, no doubt, from your inability to remember who said what

No, it's called correcting an error. You still cannot demonstrate anything hypocritical that I've posted. I'm forced to conclude that you don't know the meaning of the word. So for your edification:

hyï¿½pocï¿½riï¿½sy (P) Pronunciation Key (h-pkr-s)
n. pl. hyï¿½pocï¿½riï¿½sies

1.The practice of professing beliefs, feelings, or virtues that one

You have absolutely no idea what the concept of civil disobedience is do you? You think it's your "get out of jail free card". You are so far off, it's not even funny.

> Despite being taught and >educated on this matter several times,

You are not capable of educating anyone. Your legal and political views are akin to the malcontents and subversive slackers of the 1960's.

> you fecklessly insist such an act
>(such as dxing) makes one a federal criminal.

It does and it is. The FCC (a FEDERAL agency) via the communications act of 1934 clearly defines both civil AND criminal penalties for violation of the law. The fact that you haven't been caught yet does not change that.

> You very clearly are >suffering some sort of massive block, some type of learning disability

Your problem is that in your narcissistic mind, that you believe that you know what's "proper". Someone can't be "educated" when the "teacher" is further off the rails than the "student". Your knowledge of the law is the worst that I've ever seen anywhere. I have a cousin who's a lawyer and he just shakes his head at your ignorance.

Stick to fishing. It's probably the only subject you know anything about.

You really should take some remedial education courses, including a course on reading comprehension. That way you wouldn't be so quick to accuse others of saying things they never said.

Fair to decent condition. Seems to work ok. Make offers via reply to direct e-mail (remove NS spam block). Being sold AS IS. Top bid on E-Bay was a joke and didn't come close to the reserve, so I'm trying here. If you're interested, let me know. Can send a pic of it - with power applied. This will be advertised in a few places, so best offer wins.

Payment via Pay pal or Postal MO only.

I don't have any "Friends" who need a CB. Most have enough of their own - most of which, don't use them. But, I know quite a few I could give it to, and it would be the same as trashing it, because they "think" they're techs and couldn't fix a radio if their ass depended on it. So, if they went to modify it, you could consider it "trashed". Hmmm. Nah, I don't think I could give that radio such a dreaded ending. Guess if I don't sell it, I'll hook it up on my desk with the ole power supply.

Many of those blogs either quote the statement or provide a link to
it. Want a list?

Because you obviously couldn't figure out how to construct even a basic search query for the specified topic.

"Tom DeLay" is not a verb, and it's pretty difficult for a search engine to confuse the name with non-related subjects.

> At that point I >wasn't about to sift through them as the search parameters were not

As I stated in another post, half of the first ten hits displayed (from those 1.3m hits) either reference or quote Delay's statement.
But you didn't even bother to read the summaries. Nor did you try to narrow the search by modifying the search term "delay" to the proper name "Tom DeLay", which would have given you 553k hits with the first ten being direct references to the statement, and the exact quote in very first hit. No, you just saw the 1.3m number and thought that would be a reasonable justification for your ignorance. It isn't.

Wrong. A shepherd doesn't defend his flock by tossing a few sheep to the wolves -- the wolves will come back and demand more sheep over and over until the flock is gone. It's a bad idea to defend our rights and freedoms by sacrificing -any- of them.

If a simple majority was sufficient to decide any and all issues then there would have been no need for the government to require a super majority vote on some issues, such as to overturn a presidential veto.
If the filibuster is repealed then what's next? Elimination of the requirement for -any- vote that requires a super majority? If that's the case then the veto power of the administrative branch is lost, and the Constitution can be changed at will by any party holding a simple majority in Congress. Bad idea, Dave.

Of course it's partisan politics. If Bush were to nominate a non-partisan judge there probably wouldn't be this hassle. Don't you think it's better to have a judge on the bench that is agreeable to both political parties? It has happened in the past.

Didn't Bush campaign in 2000 on the promise to bring the parties together? Well, when do you suspect he will begin to fulfill that promise?

I don't know to what "level" you are referring and it doesn't matter;
the fact is that both sides use and abuse the filibuster. You can make your own judgment as to whether one party abuses it more than another party, but that's just your opinion and doesn't mean squat. Neither of us have all the facts needed to make such a judgment since neither of us know just how many times a vote was blocked merely on the -threatof a filibuster, or through tactics -other than- the filibuster. And we both know that if the tables were turned then the Republicans would be doing the exact same thing that the Democrats are doing now.

Nice buzzword -- "obstructionist policy". But I have a better name for it and oddly enough it comes from electronics: "parasitic supression".
IOW, the filibuster, despite its abuse, does a very effective job at preventing a majority party from running amok.

Maybe. And if it ever comes to a vote we will see, won't we?

As I stated before, I think the Democrats are going to block it with a filibuster or with the threat of a filibuster. You have another

How is it not codified? Unlimited discussion is permitted whenever a time limit is not passed by a super majority. That's the law. Are you suggesting the filibuster isn't codified because the law doesn't include the word "filibuster"?

Wrong. A 1/2-wave Hertzian dipole has a gain of roughly +3 dBi in free space. It has 0 dB when referenced to itself.

That's an assumtion -you- made, and it's also wrong: A resonant dipole can be any multiple of 1/2-wave, and has a gain that differs depending upon the length and directionality.

> If the dipole is non-resonant and requires a tuner to force

Wrong again. A tuner only adds insertion loss, which is usually quite small if it's built with quality components. The insertion loss is easily overcome by slightly increasing the length of the elements, which is no big deal since the antenna is already non-resonant.

> It won't stand a

Well guess what, Dave -- a 5/8-wave antenna is a non-resonant antenna and requires some method of impedance matching. Thank you.

A horizontal dipole can have a wide variation in take-off angle depending on height above ground, ground resistance, proximity to other structures or objects, etc. And the noise floor may be slightly lower but that's a product of it's directivity, as compared to a vertical which is omnidirectional. A pair of phased verticals, as well as any other directional antenna or antenna array, will also have the effect of lowering the noise floor.

>> Like I said
>>before, just throw some wire up into the trees (or whatever tall

>Of course. But a dipole is a basic antenna. It has no gain.

Wrong again. As I said before, a 1/2-wave Hertzian dipole in free space has about 3 dB gain over an isotropic antenna; but a dipole is merely an antenna with two elements and is not limited to a 1/2-wave Hertzian configuration. Not only that, but a tuner isn't limited to dipole antennas -- they can load up a long-wire just as easily.

> A properly
>made purpose built CB antenna will out perform it.

Get a clue, Dave. You're an Extra, right? What's the name of that tech school you claim to have attended?

>Let's look at this from a practical standpoint. If a non-resonant,

This resounds back to your argument that roger-beeps were illegal because most radios didn't include them. The problem is that a tuner requires a little skill and practice to use, which is beyond the scope of the intended purpose of the service (a plug-n-play radio service).
A tuner requires readjustment when changing channels within the CB, and most CBers don't want to deal with the hassle. Regardless, there are still many CBers that do indeed use a tuner, not just with prefab antennas but also with homebrew and beverage-can hooks. And just about every CBer who runs a tube linear uses a tuner because it's built into the amp, which by itself blows big holes in your "practical" argument.
Then there is the issue of the non-resonant 5/8-wave antenna..... oh,

Dave, when will you learn?

>A non-resonant dipole has ONE big advantage. It's a compromise antenna

If that were the case then every CBer would have a 5-el yagi on a 30' mast and a 9' whip on their vehicles.

>>>For ham band use, I agree with you, just not for CB.
>>What's the name of that tech school, Dave?
>What's your call sign Frank?

I'm not a ham. I answered your question, now you answer mine: what's the name of your tech school, Dave?

>Frank, your experience with both ham and CB radio is sorely lacking.
>You read a few books and web sites and think you have all the answers.
>OTOH, I've walked the walk for the last 30+ years and have played with >more antennas and equipment than I can remember. I have also been in >contact with people in the know when it comes to antennas. What I >know, I know through experience, and that's worth 10X what you read in >any book.

Which explains why your theory is severely lacking. If you took the time to actually learn why these things work and -then- applied them to your experiences, you could be the guru you think you already are.
But you don't and you're not. Instead you do things backwards: you theorize about radio based on your own experience, then read only enough to validate your own conclusions whether they are right or not.

Check this out, Dave: Education doesn't come from a textbook that some geek sat down and wrote just for shits and giggles. It's a compendium of knowledge that has been collected from over a century of research, experimentation and practical experience by experts in all aspects of the field. Those experts didn't become experts simply by playing with CB radios as a hobby for 30 years. And an education doesn't include a couple textbooks, a few lectures and a test -- it also includes years of experience with the practical application of that knowledge. When you mock those that have a formal education and extensive experience in electronic communication then you mock the same people who made the television set you watch way too much, the telephone and cell-phone infrastructure that keeps this world talking, the NASA and JPL engineers who communicate with space probes billions of miles away, etc, etc, etc. While I may not have participated in any world-changing technology, I certainly have an education and the experience in the field that puts you to shame. Yet -you- try to teach -me- theory based on your education from a third-rate vocational tech school, a few years in a CB shop, and your experience in =amateur= radio.

And here's the kicker: Do you have any idea where I came up with the idea to just throw a couple wires in the air and load them up with a tuner? A ham.

Parks isnt his name...which would make him a cross between a chicken and a bear. Hmmm...an egg laying bear, maybe? Could be, since all his threats to AKC'ers have been a colossal goose egg.

1. In all his years of acting like he could actually stop the AKC somehow, he hasn't. That's cuz he can't.

2. In all his years of being on rec.radio.keyclown he has never given his true name. He never will because he is a sissy. He fears the AKC.

1494. Cobra 148 GTL frequency changes when cover is put back on

A friend brought over a Cobra 148 GTL that was off frequency on sideband (3 kHz or more). I put the radio back on frequency, but when I put the case back on it goes back off frequency by as much as 1 kHz. I have seen radios change frequency a little as the metal case gets put back on, but this one goes nuts. It also goes nuts if I put my hand near the circuit board. It is too big a change to be normal for these things. It had been moded for extra channels, and Iunsoldered all the extra wires off to see if that was behind the problem, but the frequency instability remains. Has anyone seen a Cobra 148 GTL do this before? This is the older model with the five pin mic plug on the side of the radio.

Wow, thanks that's very kind of you! Will drop you an email in a mo...

Thanks once again. Yeah, it would be nice to try and keep CB going with the next generation - if there are any retiring CB'ers who's kit has been mothballed and resided to the loft I'd be happy to try and make full use of it.

I have an old Console V base station made by SBE in the '70s. Great radio, but it's having problems -- the squelch isn't working anymore -- at least not the way it's supposed to. A fellow I know who has worked on it thinks it's something in an IC in the radio, but the parts are almost impossible to come by.

I have the manual and schematics -- anyone out there want to try their hand at going through it for me?

I agree... sometimes you can hear the skip great... have a couple hundred watts... and get nobody. Other times you get someone calling you when you're running legal power. The skip is extremely unpredictable.

My bad, FAs should only be posted to the .swap and .marketplace groups which were created for ads and let discussion groups be for discussion. However it seems that everyone who has something to sell on ebay thinks all groups were created so they would have a place to hawk their junk in hopes of getting an extra dollar. As can be seen, these FA were spammed to multiple groups without regards to the type of group.

Hey Vinnie.....I can help you. The formula for a 1/4 wavelength radiator is (234 / F) whereby F is the frequency in MHz. This will give you the length in feet. For the radials, (237 / F) will give you that length. Always remember...multiply the radiator length by 1.05 and that is another way of calculating the 1/4 wavelength radials.
The feedpoint impedance of a 1/4 wave ground plane is 37 ohms when you have the radials at a 90 degree angle with respect to the radiator. If you have the radials drooped at a 45 degree angle, the impedance rises to approximately 50 ohms.
If you have a single radial drooped at a 180 degree angle with respect to the radiator, the impedance rises to 75 ohms.
There was an article in RF Design magazine a few years back, explaining why certain impedances are used in the RF industry.
72 ohms was the impedance that produced minimum cable losses.....50 ohms is a happy medium.
On a final note.....at 37 ohms, you will have a VSWR of 1.3 to 1.....at 75 ohms, you will have a VSWR of 1.5 to 1. What is the difference here? For a transmitter with a tube output and an internal matching network, you wouldn't really see much effect. For a typical solid state transmitter, there would be some difference between the two antenna impedances, because the broadband solid state transmitter would be called upon to deliver more current to the antenna. It probably wouldn't have any effect, unless the ALC circuit was aggressive in its operation. In this case, power foldback would occur into the 37 ohm load. Would it happen? Probably not.
I hope this helps.

Pete

FREE!!

For advanced techs and serious radio hobbyists, we're now offering a FREE copy of our previously published "CB EPROM DATA BOOK" by Martin Pickering. (EPROM = Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.) We sold it for many years but it's now out of print. This little manual of 60 illustrated pages is an absolute GEM of CB technical knowledge you'll just never find anywhere else. And it's yours for FREE from our Web site.

This book reveals the secrets of advanced channel programming, and picks up where our "CB PLL DATA BOOK" (www.cbcintl.com/pllbook.htm) leaves off. You'll get a thorough background in how these amazing programmable chips can be used to modify many popular CB PLL circuits for expanded frequency coverage. Covers the basic programming techniques, and even includes real PC board artwork for making EPROM circuits. Sample artwork includes EPROM boards for the popular MB8719, PLL02A, ï¿½PD2824, and ï¿½PD858 PLL circuits.

To learn the technical TRUTH about CB Radio without all the hype from people who are just plain ignorant, check out the following books from CBC International. They're selling right now at a big discounts on our EBAY & AMAZON stores too.

Check it out!

To see exactly what these books look like, plus all the specific, chapter-by-chapter details, see our Web at:

www.cbcintl.com

Some of the books included are:

BOOK #1: THE "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE To Peaking Out & Repairing CB Radios. List $25. The most popular "big dummy's" guide ever published on do-it-yourself CB repairs & modifications. Covers peaking of receivers, transmitters, modulation, mike problems, antenna & SWR problems, detailed frequency modifications for both crystal & PLL radios. Loaded with charts, illustrations, and specific instructions for most brands including the new export models. This latest edition also covers slider and broadbanding tricks, FM conversions, and much more!

BOOK #2: THE CB PLL DATA BOOK. List $20. The only complete reference source on CB PLL synthesizer circuits ever published! Detailed PLL theory explained in layman's terms. How they work, and how to modify them for many more channels. Includes specific PLL block mixing diagrams, truth charts, & IC pin function diagrams for nearly every PLL chip ever used. Covers all the most popular U.S. & export chassis, with specific listings of all models using the chip.

BOOK #3: UNDERSTANDING & REPAIRING CB RADIOS. List $42. Giant 370-page technical book for the professional repairman. Picks up where the "SCREWDRIVER EXPERT'S" GUIDE leaves off. Includes circuit descriptions & troubleshooting guide for 23- & 40-Ch., crystal & PLL, solid-state & tube, AM, FM, SSB, CW, American & export models. Covers test equipment (& where to find it), transistor basics, synthesizers, receivers, transmitters, power supplies, T/R switching, antennas, interference, parts & accessory sources. Over 350 illustrations including schematics, charts, and photos. Huge subject index also lets you look up repairs by symptoms. This is "must" reading for any serious CB technician!

You're crying about an auction that ended 2 months ago?
Seems to me that the bay is here to stay.
Learn to use your filters.
Seems to be the only way for you not to see them.
Also, one mans junk in another mans treasure.....
It also seems that people who view these newsgroups might be curious as to what's for sale elsewhere.
Many have gotten stuck buying on these groups with broken items.
If someone has integrity there is usually not a problem, but there is the other side of the coin where broken items were sold. The new owner has no recourse. At least on ebay there is feedback, not a perfect system but one that works.
And with paypal you CAN get a refund a good part of the time if there is a problem.
Been there and done that.

K1MAN seems to have lost his website and his will to continue fighting the ARRL and FCC. This is posted on qrz.com:

Posted: April 07 2005,04:48

So.. first I don't hear him on the air any more. I assumed that maybe Riley finally did him in.

Then, I do a lookup of his www.k1man.com website and it's no longer there. In fact, I can't find a remnant of the AARA anywhere.

He always made it out to seem as if the AARA had a large amount of members in its ranks. If this was the case, how come they aren't backing him up; i.e. getting his website back up and getting him back on the air. Did his entire "empire" go bankrupt?

Sorry for the re-hash.. but honestly, I felt this too funny not to post about.

Any info out there... let's hear it.

It should be noted that these formulas are only appoximations. Actual sizes are dependent upon the conductivity and diameter of the elements, and the quantity and angle of the radials. When building a resonant antenna it's a good idea to make the elements a little long and trim to resonance.

These are impedances for antennas in free space, and are practical only if you can mount your antenna well above the ground and away from any tall objects.

Close. For lowest loss, the optimum characteristic impedance of coax is 76.9 ohms. 70-73 ohm coax is used as a compromise between low loss coax and coax optimized for minimization of flashover, the latter having an impedance of about 60 ohms.

And while many people have many different ideas as to why 50 ohm coax is made, it is just a compromise between low-loss/low-flashover coax of 72 ohms and coax optimized for handling power (about 30 ohms, which is too lossy for practical transmission lines).

.....uh, what?

Both tubes and transistors use matching networks, so I don't know what distinction you are trying to make there. Power will be reflected from an antenna/coax mismatch -regardless- of whether you have a tube or transistor final. And what does an ALC circuit have to do with transmission line propogation?

So far, that is what I have read. What I am going to do is this. I am going to add the 45 angled GP, simply because it is fairly cheap, and because it will be much easier to put it up now, than later. The formula you gave indicates that radials should be about 8.8 feet at 27 MHz. If these radials fair poorly, I will take Lancer's advice and build my own. For some reason, the radials are 6 feet. I don't know if they ran 9 feet of wire in there, or what.

>If you have a single radial drooped at a 180 degree angle with respect to

I won't do this.

It's does help, Thanks ! I am borrowing an Autek RF analyzer to check the antenna while I am up in the tree. Most people that have purchase this antenna, say that it is tuned very well to 27.205. I should be flat up and down in CB and 10 meters for about 1 MHZ.

I will follow up.

The reason some people don't know for sure
if they are going to Heaven when they die
is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven which is described in the Holy Bible as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple
it is to be saved so that we can live
forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus
is Lord and believe in your heart that God
raised Him from the dead, you
WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven
to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay
our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel
supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and in three days come back to life again and it happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you. Now you are a real

Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrong doing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I
write this to you so that you will not sin.
But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to
place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ
may never get another chance to do so
because you do not know when you will die.

This means that if you die without
trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever separated from
the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of
eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony
for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today.
Only then will you have true peace in your
life knowing that no matter what happens you
are on your way to Heaven.

Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ,
Internet Evangelist

So why post FAs in groups that are for discussion? That is what the .swap and .marketplace groups are for. Why should I have to filter out FAs in a discussion group where FAs shouldn't be there in the first place? If people in a discussion group are curious about what may be for sale on ebay then they can check the .swap or .marketplace groups or go to ebay and search, it ain't rocket surgery.
Look at the boatanchor group as an example, which was set up to DISCUSS boatanchor type equipment, along comes the ebayers with a few FAs, then someone else sees the FAs, posts their FAs and pretty soon the group is more FA ads than discussion.

It is time all you Jesus freaks pulled your heads out of your brainwashed asses and realized that we are no more then animate inanimation and that there is no god and never has been we are just a fluke and no more, just a shit luck planet lucky that we developed intelligence and no more then that so get it together and leave the rest of us alone. If you cannot accept that or fear the fact that you are nothing more to bad for you!!!!!! GET LOST It is time you all came out of the 1400's and learned that. Grow up we now know the causes of plagues and it is not a vengeful god kinda scary for all of you that cant handle the truth.

Does you and your friend really think I'll let you get away with talking to me like you do? There ain't a man alive who gets away with that in person, so being on Usenet doesn't make it acceptable to me now or ever.

The only thing that will change my attitude toward either of you is a sincere apoplogy.

If you two can't muster that, prepare for the consequences. The best layed plans are in place.

try replacing (testing) the pot
if that don't work, then go to the board.

Will shutting a car door on the coax from the antenna do any harm? It creates an indention in the cable.

Not a bit. His threats are fun to read and I thought I would share them with the group just so everybody can see just how powerless he really is to do anything.

>Although you can still apologize.

He doesn't deserve it nor has he done anything to earn it. And he most certainly isn't going to get any respect by demanding it either.

Yup, this Jesus stuff is as realistic as the Blair Witch, it's all fiction.
While your alive it's a living hell to survive and heaven is when you die and don't give a shit. Dig up your relatives and ask them how there doing,because there is nothing after this.

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and in three days come back to life again and it happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead.

Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace.
Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you. Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this
life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid
sin(wrong doing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I
write this to you so that you will not sin.
But if anybody does sin, we have one who
speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to
place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ
may never get another chance to do so
because you do not know when you will die.

This means that if you die without
trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever separated from
the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of
eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony
for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by
allowing Jesus Christ to save you today.
Only then will you have true peace in your
life knowing that no matter what happens you
are on your way to Heaven.

Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ,
Internet Evangelist
Ronald L. Grossi

A "small" indention won't do any harm. However small is a relative term. If the indention is too big you'll short the outer shield to the center conductor. You don't want that to happen, period. If you have access to a SWR meter then check your match. If it's 2 to 1 or less then don't worry about it.

It's amazing how quickly some people resort to digging up the past when they can't deal with the present. Heck, even Dave agrees with me on this one -- every time I bring up Bush's DUI or business failures, Dave says they are irrelevant. So Vinnie, are you calling Dave a liar?

You could be right. He seems to take extreme pleasure in posting candid snapshots of men and boasting about his adventures to obtain them. Makes you really wonder about his true choice of gender preference. If his neighbors knew they were living next to some creep who likes to slip around houses, shooting photos of men through their home windows, they would be protesting to the local police department not to let him live anywhere near them and their kids while checking the registered sex offender list on the Internet for his name. And this psychologically distubed person wants respect? That's the best joke I've heard yet.

Very true.....I use a spectrum analyzer with a directional coupler and trim for maximum return loww.

This pertains to solid state amateur transceivers that don't have an adjustable output matching network.....most of today's units have fixed-tuned bandpass filters after the output stage. I am not referring to transmission line propagation; I am referring to the fact that, with a fixed-tuned output network that expects to see a 50 ohm characteristic impedance, the ALC can fold back the power. Usually, that doesn't occur until a VSWR of 2 to 1 is reached. My explanation is for illustrative purposes only.

That's a good point. It use to piss me off when these FA started to show up on the groups.
We can still discuss stuff here but it seems it is the way of the world.
It's like the price of gas, nobody likes it, but it keeps going up and we still have to buy it.

Cmd Buzz Corey wrote

So why post FAs in groups that are for discussion? That is what the .swap and .marketplace groups are for. Why should I have to filter out FAs in a discussion group where FAs shouldn't be there in the first place? If people in a discussion group are curious about what may be for sale on ebay then they can check the .swap or .marketplace groups or go to ebay and search, it ain't rocket surgery.
Look at the boatanchor group as an example, which was set up to DISCUSS boatanchor type equipment, along comes the ebayers with a few FAs, then someone else sees the FAs, posts their FAs and pretty soon the group is more FA ads than discussion.

Hello Nathan 0515:

I use RG-142 Coax, it is the same size as RG-58 only its bullet proof.

New it will cost almost 2 dollars a foot, but I have slamed the truck door on it for years and years.

It is called spam. Especially, when they cross-post to so many groups.
I just look at it like this...if they can't seem to follow netiquette, then I don't want to do business with them. Unfortunately, there are so many people online that are ignorant, it will never go away. So, I just report them.

Hi Folks:
A long time ago, a guy who worked for the consolidated waste here gave me a box of CB's. My neighbor and I fixed up a few. Two radios, that were alike, each had two TO-220 case finals and a single driver. It might have been a 23 channel radio. I remember they were hugh mobile units. We made one good one out of the two. Well, the neighbor wanted this radio bad, so I let him have it. Does anyone know what brand CB had 2 finals, i suspect class AB?
Thanks!
Harry

I understood that much. My point was that whenever an antenna/coax mismatch occurs, tuning the output tank (as with a tube final) doesn't cure the mismatch or the resulting signal loss. All it does is protect the final from the reflected power. The output tank should be matched to the characteristic impedance of the coax whether the final is a tube or a transistor. If the coax shows standing waves, the mismatch should be fixed at the point of mismatch, not at the radio. I realize that this is not always practical, but people should know that such a conjugate match just dissipates that reflected power somewhere else, usually from the outside of the coax or the radio.

As for ALC, I thought you were referring to a different type of limiting. My bad.

Well, you do have a point about the leadership and government, but no one in their right mind would want to live in a country with 10 months of winter and 2 months of bad sledding. Well, except Eskimos I suppose. The only decent Canadians left that ice-hole and migrated to Louisiana.

Also, you might want to stop hanging onto our coattails. We don't need you, and if it were not for us, you'd be speaking Japanese now. We are the sole reason you were not taken during WWII.

Now that IS the bottom line.

Does that have the old MB8719 PLL? If it has the newer RCI8719, it could be the cause. I read on a website that RCI8719 was designed with one pin floating, that causes it to go haywire with a channel mod.

Dopeymopey also known as his false name steveo, the queen of NE Ohio, whined again on command of the AKC! YAHOOOOO!

Here ya are, posting the same tired ass shit for a year...whoopie.

Just shows again how totally impotent at stopping the AKC you are. Thank you for barking on our command.

Here's a biscuit, wristflipper.

He still can't do one single thing to stop the AKC from crushing keyclownism. He is a frustrated little boy cuz he never learned to function as an adult. He ranted and whined and screamed for toys and candy when his mommy took him to Wal Mart as a child, and she always gave in...to avoid a big scene.

As an adult he thinks that he can still do that, and if he rants enough the AKC will quake in fear. NOT. Mopeydopie, also known as moparholic@hotmail.com is a childish baby with a big mouth a small mind, and a smaller male endowment.

The poor nutless child can't win and it kills him.

You my fine feathered friend are a embarassment to society and humanity... such an attack on anyone is so disgusting as to be vulgar--if you are the new breed of ham, the future is hopeless...
Where are you people comming from????

Point taken.....it sounds like you are either also in the business, or have quite a bit of interest. I understand that an output matching network only tunes out the imaginary terms, and that matching the impedance at the antenna feedpoint is the best approach.

In what way? If the length of the dipole is at a no resonant length, you have to "force" it to a proper impedance match through the use of a tuner. Standing waves will still be present after the tuner, and efficiency will suffer as a result.

Why have a resonant antenna at all if a non-resonant antenna works better? It doesn't make sense.

I've tried loading up different antennas that I've had to run on bands they were not designed for, and while I could certainly get better than a 1.5:1 SWR, they might as well be a load of bed springs for as well as it worked.

An Isopole maybe? IIRC, that's a 2 meter antenna. I never particularly liked them. I've had better performance from a Hustler G7. Especially on VHF, you don't see people running non-resonant dipoles. Gain is particularly important there.

Proper decoupling can be achieved through the proper use of a radial counterpoise, which is what is lacking in the "stick" style antennas
we're discussing on CB

That is correct. For best performance, a dipole needs to be at least 1/2 wave above the ground.

Also correct.

An antenna radiates most efficiently at its resonant frequency.
Practical experience with local communications pretty much supports my observations (or more accurately is the basis for them). I've made many dipoles over the years, and none of them have ever matched or even came close to the 5/8th wave ground plane for local work on CB.
DX is another matter. Dipoles work very well there. Perhaps that's why many H.F. hams have several different antennas to switch to, to take advantage of varying DX conditions or groundwave, as their communications dictate. When working 40 meter groundwave, a ground mounted vertical is often a superior choice.

But the past is what sets a pattern of behavior. Look at what they're digging up from Mikey Jackson's past. Looks like Vinnie has exposed some hypocrisy from you. So maybe you should be a little less zealous to call other people hypocrites in the future.

You fail to consider the standing waves which will still be present in the feedline due to the mismatch. A tuner only presents a proper match to the transmitter. With a high mismatch in the feedline, losses increase as well and creating a tendency to radiate from the feedline.

In order to compensate for this the tuner should be mounted at the feedpoint of the 4:1 balun that is normally used to feed 450 Ohm ladder line to such designs. But such is impractical for guys who change bands and frequency often, unless the tuner is automatic.

But keeping with the original perspective, of a simple antenna system
for Vinnie, this falls far short of that objective.

A 5/8 wave is most certainly resonant. It's just that the feedpoint impedance is high and needs to be transformed. It's a different issue than forcing a match from something that is not resonant naturally.

You can have a 1:1 SWR but not be 50 Ohms.

Time to read some more books. Or better yet, befriend an experienced ham to show you.

Antenna tuners were available as an accessory for CB for less than the cost of a good SWR meter. Granted they were simple coaxial in and out tuners.

>A tuner requires readjustment when changing channels within the CB,
>and most CBers don't want to deal with the hassle.

So you are now claiming that CB'ers are too "dumb" to handle that?

And to add further evidence to your lack of experience with CB, it was common that "matchboxes" were often used by CB'ers to "correct" a mismatch within their antennas. Instead of taking the time to properly tune the antenna, they forced the match with the tuner. The radio was happy, as it saw a 1:1 SWR, but the signal was not so good. When a more knowledgable person would finally retune the antenna, and the tuner was removed, signal improved considerably.

Not at all. A tube amplifier requires a tuner because the impedance of a tube is much higher than 50 ohms, and needs to be transformed. It's not practicality, it's necessity.

No kidding. You seemed to have failed the "practical application" glaring hole by claiming a pompous, superior attitude as if this was

I'm not mocking them. They know what they are doing. And I work with many of them on a daily basis. You probably have products in your home (or will) that I have had a part to play in their development. I work in the field every day. I am not mocking them, I am mocking you.
You who CLAIM to be educated, but evidence suggests you are sorely lacking in practical application of whatever it is you might have

As far as you know. But it is evidently light years ahead of those internet websites you lift your information from while you sit at home alone with no other people to "relate" to.

>And here's the kicker: Do you have any idea where I came up with the

Not all hams are mensa candidates. And most hams know that one antenna solution, which may be great in one application, is not necessarily good in another. In ham radio, there is no "one size fits all" answer.

But then again, you wouldn't know that. You're not a ham (or CB'er).

So much for running a non-resonant length antenna through a tuner.

Which is the main reason why a non-resonant, tuner matched antenna is less efficient than one that is resonant. But you'll argue that with

Not only that, but the bandpass filter characteristics of the output stages can change if the load impedance changes significantly, increasing loss and broadening the cutoff points.

I seem to recall that there is a germanium PNP transistor (a 2SB-type) in there (One of very few), that has a tendency to go bad. I once worked on a Console V with a similar problem years ago. I don't have the schematic for the radio any more or I'd give you the part number.

To the best of my knowledge there were no older 23 channel radios with "dual R.F. finals". The Cobra 135 had a separate final for AM and SSB, but they were not run in parallel. Most radios did, however have dual audio output "finals", at least before integrated audio amp IC's hit the scene.

If they were newer "export" type radios, there are several which have dual R.F. finals. The President Grant, Several Galaxy models, and the RCI-2950 just to name a few.

Not necessarily. It's common to have built in protection against hooking something like this up backwards. This protection is commonly in the form of a diode that blows an internal fuse, when hooked up backwards. The fuse is usually on the circuit board and not accessible from the outside. You could open it up and look around the area where the power enters the unit. If you see just crispy blackened circuit board, throw it away. If not, look for a fuse or possible blown diode. A fuse may be in a clip, making it easy to replace, but sometimes they use fuses with pigtails and are soldered in.
If you are not competent with a soldering iron, find someone who is and have them replace it for you. You can probably get a replacement fuse at Radio Shack.

N8WWM and another individual have been harassing CB'ers for 5 plus years now in Rec.Radio.CB. Sending threatening Emails, signing you up for Spam, sending virus, false accusation, vulgar language, making vulgar web pages all this while changing screen nics to bypass filters so that you don't have the chance to filter them out.
Rec.Radio.CB used to talk about radio both legal & illegal, but these two people came on to the group both supporting and condoning illegal activities, but found it was mush more fun to harrass and flood the group with useless posts, sometimes 100 to 200 posts a day!
Being Steveo is close to these people, he's called them on their offers of, "Go ahead, we invite you to show up". Well Steveo did just that and the best they could do was peer out the windows and door, to afraid to stop out into the street.

Landshark

Now watch the responses they throw out ;)

Wrong, in this case it is most certainly a noun,,a pronoun. You claiming it is also a verb in "this" case (when coupled with the other pronoun

"Schiavo") displays your incompetence regarding this entire issue.

Pirate radio stations are a dime a dozen here. Everyone knows someone who is involved some way or another. It's the great ones that get the attention.

,you want to know how long a pirate radio station can last on a boat and heckle the FCC? I'll bet you would :)

Now..imagine a group out there of members dedicated to nothing more than making certain a certain pirate radio station remians on the air. Imagine, if you would, one gets shut down for whatever reason, within minutes, another location picks up the slack and begins rebroadcasting. Now, think about thirty or so hard core activists who have the capability and are interested in nothing more than sticking it to Clear Channel and are willing to pay the piper should the need arise. This group is growing, and so far, several have come from the rank and file from Clear Channel's own employ.

Go on then and ask Keith, since you brought it up. You most certianly blamed him. And while you are invoking such past discussions, it would serve proper at this time if you were held to your own espoused standard that what took place in the past is irrelevant, as you just told another. The definition of the term has not changed, your personal feelings and bleeding from the gums, not withstanding.
You fecklessly insist such an act
(such as dxing) makes one a federal criminal.

>It does and it is.

It doesn't. An inability to distinguish between federal, criminal, and civil acts displayed by yourself is not shared by anyone else, only you. You are assuming all rules and laws governed by a federal agency are criminal and this simply isn't so. Your error, is you mistakenly believe the term "federal" can be interchanged with the term "criminal" wehn relating to the rules and laws they govern. This is your bad, Dave, not anyone elses.

> The FCC (a FEDERAL >agency)

> via the communications act of 1934 clearly >defines both civil AND criminal penalties for >violation of the law. The fact that you haven't >been caught yet does not change that.

Yet, the fact one hasn't been convicted of such DOES change -your- mistaken position. The fact that you disagree with the US laws and justice system that does not allow anyone to refer to another as a criminal unless they are found guilty and pronounced as such in a court of law, is irrelevant, as it again is your ignorance responsible for your mistaken belief.

Only a court of law can refer to one as a criminal, and yes, the fact that one has NOT been caught yet (as you tried and failed with) most certainly abdicates them from being referred a criminal,,,,,again, the fact that you disagree with our justice system is YOUR bad.

You very clearly are suffering some sort of massive block, some type of learning disability that prevents you from comprehending the differences between what constitutes civil and criminal penalties, despite being properly instructed each time you shout your ignorance concerning this subject. You erroneously claimed, "it is perception" (yours, albeit wrong) that distinguishes between such.

>Your problem is that in your narcissistic mind,

(snip)

Try and not permit my education of you to allow yourself to become angry, as when you become angry, you get off topic and personal and must be corrected and brought back in to the fold. AS much as your need dictates, such is not about me, it's about your inability to properly distinguish the differences between civil and criminal penalties, and the fact that a federal agency governs such, does not make it a federal crime, as you mistakenly and repeatedly maintain. You should have realized such when you were informed about the Federal DOT's existence (you denied their existence). The Federal DOT enforces many rules and laws, and they are all not of a criminal nature, despite your inability to comprehend such. If you need more examples, you may indicate such and they will be provided.

>Someone can't be "educated" when the "

>teacher" is further off the rails than the >worst that I've ever seen anywhere.

Yet, it was I who taught you roger beeps were legal for cb (you had to confirm it with the FCC), after you cried for months that they were illegal.
Your reasons for doing so, are irrelevant, it merely illustrates whose knowledge of the law is compromised.
You are the only one taking issue, Dave. Ask anyone on ths group, anyone at all, if they agree with you regarding your claim of what constitutes a federal criminal. Off you go now...

>I have a cousin who's a lawyer

Hehehe,,,as I said,,,off you go now.
You find it important enough you feel you must mention you have a cousin who is a lawyer, but no identification, resutling in you not providing for your claim.. You found it important enough to claim you have a friend who was busted by the fcc, but will not provide for the claim. You feel it important enough to claim you have cops who are friends who gave you the wrong definition of Pa law, but of course you will not provide for the claim. That's pretty funny, considering the source, but let's remain focused. Your gaffe of using "criminal", "civil" and "federal" as similes when referring to the dx law just because such is administered by a federal agency, is wrong. That's all there is to it.

The real joke is that you don't even bother to read the links your posted to the stories about your boy "Bob Noxious". In them they state that it's a criminal violation to operate an unlicensed transmitter.
The only difference between the FM broadcast band and the freeband is the frequency, and the visibility to the public.

Once again you base your mistaken opinion on technicalities and semantics. Someone who murders someone is still guilty of a criminal act regardless if he's been caught yet. Being pronounced guilty is only a formality. The same holds true for the FCC rules.

Yep, the old subversive ploy of thinking that "it's only guilty if you're caught" mentality. Typical of all slackers and scofflaws.

Many of the Eimac power triodes and tetrodes are rated for use at AF.

The 3CX400A7/8874 is a compact high-mu power triode intended for use in zero bias Class B amplifiers in audio or RF applications. Operation with zero bias simplifies circuitry and cathode driven operation is attractive since a power gain as high as twenty can be obtained.

The 5CX1500A is designed for use as a Class AB1 linear amplifier in audio or radio frequency applications. Its characteristic low intermodulation distortion makes it especially suitable for single sideband service. The tube is also recommended for use as a Class C RF power amplifier in CW, FM and AM service.

The 5CX1500A is good for 3200 Watts as a class AB1 audio power amp:

MAXIMUM RATINGS TYPICAL OPERATION
Class Type of Service Plate Voltage (Volts) Plate current (Amps) Plate Voltage (Volts) Screen Voltage (Volts) Plate Current (Amps) Drive Power (Watts) Output Power (kiloWatts)
AB1 AF Amplifier or Modulated 4,000 1.0 3,800 500 1.3 -- 3.22

A look through the catalog at <http://www.cpii.com/eimac/index.html>
is very instructive.

You can, with enough work, put up a network of transmitters which alternate randomly and quickly, thereby confusing tracking stations (at least temporarily). But the source material has to get there somehow. You either have to beam it there with some sort of a radio link or send it via the internet. Either method is traceable back to the source.

I can sympathize with their passion, I am no fan of the Clear Channel borg collective. This is not all that much different in principle than the battle between the money grubbing recording industry and those who download songs for free on the internet. Every time the RIAA sticks it to P2P'ers, they just find a new way to get it done. The original rendition of Napster went down in flames, but many new decentralized networks have sprung up in its place. Eventually the market will have to adopt a new business model. Records (and CD's) are a thing of the past.

Send it back to Ranger and they'll fix it for you. They will put the radio back to what it was supposed to be, a 10 meter radio, if it has been modified to 11 meter. If you are planning to use it on the CB band, you'll have to modify it yourself, or get someone to do it for you. Very easily done, by the way. Be aware, it is against the rules to do so.

Are you sure that those weren't export type radios... those are the only ones I've ever seen with two bipolar finals in parallel.
Unfortunately, not a very good idea with bipolars.

Dear Mr. Busch WA3MOJ, I ask that you please stop changing your screen nics to by pass newsfilters, per you're ISP's TOS you are in clear violation doing that just to harrass me.
You have changed you screen nics 3 times this week alone, with none of them to begin with as valid, so again, please stop this.

Here we go again. DAVE, is Michael Jackson guilty?
Think before you answer, are you there? sitting in the jury box? listening to the testimony? following the judges orders concerning what type of evidence
you are going to hear? not formulating any opinion until you and the rest of your fellow jurors are deliberating the case? Of course not, so how can you say because someone here is running a 1000 watts and talking on the freeband is a criminal?
You can't, you are not a sheriff, judge & jury, to which is the only way someone can be classified
a criminal, after being convicted, before that they are only a suspect.

Nope, it's called a guilty conscience, to which you can only be called guilty in front of the lord all-mighty, everything else has to be done through a court of law.

Antennas are referenced to either or both because both are constants.

Unfortunately, yes, that's exactly what you said, and it's absolutely dumb since -every- antenna has 0 dB gain in reference to itself.

But you didn't say "half wave dipole". You said only "dipole" which could be any kind of dipole, be it a double-ended Zepp or the rabbit ears perched on top of your overused television set.

-YOU- failed to notice that I made no mention of a transmission line, although I -did- reference a page from a ham that used ladder line. A lot of inexpensive tuners include a 4:1 balun for a balanced output, and SWR losses on ladder line are negligible. The only SWR you need to worry about is between the radio and tuner.

>But keeping with the original perspective, of a simple antenna system
>for Vinnie, this falls far short of that objective.

Simplicity dictates buying an Imax or Antron and sticking it in a tree or on a pole. Plug-n-play. You can't get much simpler than that. The complexity arose when you threw a fit after my suggestion that Vinnie might want to try and make his own antenna.

>>>chance against a commercially produced (or home made if you are >>>so-inclined) 5/8th wave vertical (with proper radials, not an Imax).

You never fail to amaze me with your repeated offerings of technical ignorance. Time for your next lesson:

A tuner is a device that is used to transform impedances. It has two ends: an input and an output. Therefore, it connects to two devices: a source (transmitter in Tx) and a load (antenna in Tx). The input of the tuner is adjusted to match the output impedance of the source, and the output of the tuner is adjusted to match the input impedance of the load. And I hope it's safe to assume that you already know that much.

But what you fail to realize is that impedance can be resistive, reactive, or both. And since a tuner isn't limited to transformation of resistances only, you can use a tuner to compensate for the reactive component of the load (e.g, a feedline with SWR or a non-resonant antenna).

Now what happens when you use a tuner to cancel the reactive component of a load? Think hard, Dave..... reactive components cancel..... can you figure it out by yourself? No, I didn't think so. The tuner and the load become RESONANT. So you use a tuner to make a resonant antenna -system- using a non-resonant antenna! And that's exactly what is happening when the input impedance of a 5/8-wave antenna is "transformed" so it can be driven from a resistive source -- a non-resonant antenna is brought to resonance with a tuner.

Geez Dave, you sure are a dumbass.

>You can have a 1:1 SWR but not be 50 Ohms.

Wrong. Noise "tends" to have the polarity of the sources. The sources of noise can be mostly vertical -or- horizontal depending on a number of factors, not the least of which are geographic location, time of day (as well as season), solar activity, band of operation......

I changed nothing. You probably had a problem with the long-wire antenna because you were expecting an omnidirectional pattern, which a long-wire does not have. It -does- have very sharp lobes with high gain, and if you know where to point them then a long-wire antenna works just dandy; as you say, "been there, done that".

Are you suggesting that after being a CBer since I was a kid, serving several years in the USMC working on radios from LF to microwaves, several more years in a commercial radio shop, several -more- years as a BE, being self-employed as a both a tech and an engineer for most of my life, and currently experimenting with weak-signal reception on the 1750m band and below 9khz, that I don't have any experience in radio?

Dave, you're an idiot.

Wrong. Those little matchboxes (I still have a couple Johnsons) were popularized during a time when a 1:1 SWR was widely considered to be the holy grail of antenna tuning, that you needed to squeeze every milliwatt from the radio. That attitude changed, and fewer CB tuners were built, as more and more CBers learned that a few points on the meter make very little difference.

It's not "necessity" since the amp is not a necessity -- there is always the alternative of using a solid-state amp, or no amp at all.

you used your crystal ball to divine the cause of a CB malfunction.

Of course you are. You mock the very idea that anyone with an education could know more about radio than what you have learned from playing with toys for 30 years. You think that just because you learned something on your own that nobody else has the right to profess such knowledge, and just because they didn't 'earn' it like you did. Yet instead of improving yourself by learning something new you focus on the biggest difference between us -- an education -- and try to hold it against me as some kind of professional malfeasance.

Well, that has to be one of the most ridiculous arguments that was ever conceived: "You is dumber'n me cuz you gots a ed-u-kashun."

It's going to take an extra week because of the late-season snow in the pass (can't get any decent acoustic panels in Spokane), but I didn't lose any money because of the delay -- I still get $5k for the job when it's done, which is a lot more than you get delivering pizzas in your lime-green Gremlin.

Silly me for assuming that an antenna needs feedline to connect to it.

Only an idiot would run 200 feet or more of open 450 Ohm ladder line.
Unless of course, you don't care about feedline radiation and RFI issues. Most antennas which are designed to use ladder line, are also spec'ed for a certain fixed length of the ladder line as part of its impedance match. At that point a balun is connected and the rest of the feedline completes the usual configuration. If you were a ham, you'd know this.

I threw a "fit"? Hardly. I have no problem with anyone making their own antennas. That's what ham radio is all about. BUT, when the suggestions you made were for antennas which do not perform well for the intended use, I felt compelled to point this out. You are not going to throw a couple of wires up in a tree, tune them with a tuner and expect it to perform as well as a commercial (or homemade if you're so inclined) gain-type, purpose-built, vertical antenna.

A tuner forces a resonant load from something which isn't resonant naturally. That's sort of like keeping someone alive with a respirator.

You can (and I have) loaded up large metal objects (like rain gutters and bedsprings), and force them to have a 1:1 SWR. But that doesn't mean that the antenna is an efficient radiator. That's my whole point.

Now for your lesson in real life application of antenna principles:

I was completely out of CB between 1990 and 1993, and I took down all of my CB antennas. When I got the bug to get back into CB again, I had the following antennas: a horizontal 10 meter dipole, a 5/8th wave 2 meter Ringo Ranger 2, a 6 meter 3 element beam (horizontal), a 2 meter 10 element Cushcraft "twistbeam" (horizontal & vertical), and a Diamond tri-band 146, 220 and 440 Mhz vertical.

Now, I also had at my disposal a tuner. I could load up every antenna in that list on the CB band, with a less than 1.5:1 SWR. Out of that list of antennas, the only one which worked somewhat acceptably was the 2 meter Ringo Ranger, as it was about a 1/4 wave long at CB frequencies. It was also at the top of my tower. The 10 meter dipole loaded the easiest, but being horizontal, wasn't much use for local talking.

Sometime later, I put my Avanti Sigma 4 back up, and it wasabout 2
"S" units stronger transmitting to others, on average, than the 2 meter Ringo through the tuner.

THAT is the difference between theory and practice. Sure you can load up a non-resonant antenna and it will "work". But it won't work as well as an antenna designed for the band.

>Geez Dave, you sure are a dumbass.

I'm not the one reading a book on antenna theory and trying to pass it off as actual experience.

Time to read another book Frank. Or better yet ask a ham. The greatest majority of noise is vertically polarized. Maybe if you have been paying attention in those theory classes instead of "teaching" logic classes, and trying to book whip your way through psychology 101, you might know this.

Where Frank? Where have you "been there and done that? You don't have a ham license. Commercial radio stations don't play with wire antennas. Wire antennas are awkward and do not work well on CB for local talking. So where Frank?

Exactly. Other than the military (Which doesn't have the time to play with gimmicky wire antennas) I have had way more experience. I was playing with the 170 Khz band when I was a kid, along with 35 years of CB experience, 24 years of ham experience, and being employed as a tech and engineer for a few high tech firms as well as 30 years of hands on CB, ham radio, and stereo repair.

By suggesting tha using a tuner is a "hassle". It's not if you understand how to use it.

Maybe that's what your inexperience has taught you, but that's not what actually happened. Yes, there were a few people out there who cringed when their SWR crept above 1.5:1. The difference that a matchbox provided did not overcome the insertion loss. But that's not the cases I was making. There were people who had serious mismatch problems (over 3:1) because they did not know how to properly tune the antenna. They then compensated for their blunder by forcing the SWR to 1:1 with a tuner. The radio was happy, but the antenna was not radiating efficiently and their signal potential was cut considerably. When the real problem was corrected, and the tuner removed, their signals increased.

The point, of course, is that if what you stated before was correct, you should be able to radiate a signal just as well with an antenna which was not in tune (non-resonant) through the use of a tuner to "force" a resonance, than with a naturally resonant antenna. My own personal experience in this exact scenario proves exactly the opposite.

No, but I have played with most of more the common home made antennas which a CB'er would be most likely to utilize. When you're young and have a lot of time, you tend to experiment alot. I did.

just stop.

A typical high performance CB'er will spend his money on the best antennas that he can afford. Whether he stays at 4 watts is a personal choice. It makes little sense to spend money on a big "honkin'" amp and then piss that power into a poor antenna. The name of the game is ERP, and that's a combination of transmitter power (minus feedline and other losses) and antenna gain.

My beef with your education is your over reliance on it and how you hold it up as some sort of badge of honor, not too unlike some hams do with their licenses. An education, without the ability to apply it, is almost useless.

Actually, Frank has no clue, and sided with George. I did not challange to meet anyone. I did not threaten to go to someone's house and sneak onto their property, and then take pictures. I did not of these. George, Chris, or whomever then threatened to come over to my house and do such a thing. I don't don't why he chose me, but did so none the less. I simply stated that if such a thing happened, that George was fair game. I was more or less defending my privacy and property. Frank took it upon himself to call me a tough guy for that reason. And that about says it all for Frank.

And I take pleasure in showing the people here that Frank is the true tough guy, as shown my the link below.

I don't know. But whether or not the court pronounced him as such doesn't change the acts that he may or may not have done.

If you witness someone killing another, do you need a jury verdict before you know that that person is a murderer?

If the law defines a particular act as criminal, then if you engage in that act, you are engaging in a criminal activity. Being labeled as such by a court is only a formality and a convenient excuse for people who want to thumb their nose at the law, and wish to ease their guilty conscience, by trying to convince themselves that their activities aren't really criminal because they haven't been caught yet..

Maybe in a legal sense, but that's a poor justification for engaging in criminal behavior, and saying; "you can't call me a criminal because a jury didn't convict me yet".

You can't serve time and be branded a "criminal" until found guilty in a court of law. But the fact that you might get away with a crime, doesn't lessen what you truly are.

Playing word games doesn't hide that fact.

Doesn't change the acts he may or may not done? If he's done something wrong, found guilty then he's a criminal.
If he done nothing wrong, went to court and was found not guilty, he should still be labeled a criminal because he's being accused?

No, it's a fact. Going around chasing speeders, j-walkers, litterbugs etc etc and calling them criminals will change nothing. You'll have to start calling 4 out of 10 people you know criminals then, because by a national survey
that's the percentage that speed.

A well known business man is accused by his ex-wife of being a child molester. DA says that he won't prosecute because lack of evidence and it doesn't look like he really did anything. You start calling him a child molester and criminal to friends and people that you know, that will leave you open for a slander lawsuit, that's why you don't run around accusing people of being criminals.

caught or convicted of it yet.

> You'll have to start calling 4 out of 10 people

Speeding is not considered a criminal offense. Operating a radio transmitter without a license is. Interesting that you lump illegally operating a radio transmitter in with such trivial summary offenses as jay-walking, speeding and simple littering. Those summary offenses do not carry criminal penalties. Violation of certain FCC rules, on the other hand, does. Some people used to think the same thing about theft of cable TV service. Until the law changed and got some teeth.
Now people who sell cable theft devices face serious jail time.

Ah, but there is a fine difference. A person accused is presumed innocent until proven guilty. But you know as well as I do that the system is flawed, and many times guilty people walk for various reasons. Conversely, some innocent people are wrongly convicted. But if I witness a crime, I don't need a jury to tell me that the perp is a criminal.

Did the alleged "child molester" brag to a bunch of people on an internet forum that he did indeed molest children? Admitting to an unlawful activity is the same thing in principle to pleading guilty in a trial. It may be "unofficial" but that's all I need to see to make up my mind.

If I arbitrarily call you a federal lawbreaking criminal for violation of FCC rules on freebanding or power levels, and I can't prove it, it becomes libel (Assuming you really aren't doing it).

If, on the other hand, I monitor you doing it, or you brag to other people that you do it, then you are engaging in a criminal activity.

Once again, this is to accommodate a person's presumption of innocence in the course of due process . And once again, if you witness a crime, you don't need a jury to tell you what your senses already did.

>Oh, by the way, that ham operator using the foul language

No, since I did not do it, and the distance between us makes it very unlikely that you heard me. Now, if I stated that I did it and/or you witnessed ME doing it, and you could positively identify me, then you could factually make that statement.

Once one is found not guilty in the US by a court of law and/or a jury of their peers, you can not claim he is guilty, regardless of what he may have done as relating to his case. Do so and you'll be broke after being sued for defamation of character along with anything else concerning libel or slander laws.

Depends on the verdict. There are only three possibilities,,,,,innocent, not guilty, and guilty.

(Think before you answer, are you there? sitting in the jury box? listening to the testimony? following the judges orders concerning what type of evidence you are going to hear? not formulating any opinion until you and the rest of your fellow jurors are deliberating the case? Of course not, so how can you say because someone here is running a 1000 watts and talking on the freeband is a criminal?)

>If you witness someone killing another, do you

You can "know" (translated in your case to being a simile for "believe") anything you wish, but even if you witnessed such an act, you are not permitted to publicly call him such IF he was tried and found other than guilty. Your belief is irrelevent.

(chuckle),,you go on trying to convince *yourself" you have the right to call one a criminal for what you perceive constitutes such. If you were to publicly refer to one with their proper name as as a criminal, based only what you present here and erroneously believe constitutes such criminal activity (such as maintaining, on more than one occasion, that one's posts in this group you -think- may belong to a certain identity, is "proof" enough (for you) to refer to the person as a criminal), a small filing fee would be paid (AFTER your criminal charges) and you would be buried in civil court by someone versed in what you mistakenly perceive as the law. After the criminal charges were applied you, the civil matter would be only a formality, based on your guilt from the outcome of the criminal trial based on your libel/slander/defamatory comments, which are in turn based on -your- erroenous beliefs.

But not dxers.
Anyways, those who sell illegal cable boxes are a much different scenario than the first you invoked. Selling illegal converters carries a much harsher charge than merely using one, but it does illustrate how far off topic you are wliling to run.

(You can't, you are not a sheriff, judge & jury, to which is the only way someone can be classified a criminal, after being convicted, before that they are only a suspect.)

>Maybe in a legal sense,

LOL,,as opposed to what? The legal sense is the only manner in which you may legally refer to one a criminal. Do it ay other way and you are opening yourself to penalties. Using your own warped logic (admitting something on the internet is the same as a guilty plea in a court of law) concerning what is said among internet babble, the mere fact that you were informed of the law on many occasion, yet continue to refer to certain proper names as a criminal, can enhance your penalties because you continued to break said laws. Even though you may correctly plead ignorance, such is never held in a court of law as a valid excuse for one breaking the law.

More of your ignorance. I can say I shot Kennedy....it means shit, except to you.

Good gawd oh mighty. Here's where you get schooled again. not only do you have no clue who one is on the internet, you are incompetently and incorrectly claiming hearsay is the same thing as pleading guilty. Your ignorance of the law has no bounds,

>It may be "unofficial" but that's all I need to see >to make up my mind.

Of course, you do. You have been mispronouncing people on the internet as "federal criminals" as long as you have been spoon-fed carefully scripted information. Now that you shout to the world your mistaken belief that what one posts on the internet is tantamount to an admission of guilt in a US court of law, all one can do is laugh at you or feel pity.
Besides, your position can get you sued, should you exercise it as you claim,

>If I arbitrarily call you a federal lawbreaking >criminal for violation of FCC rules on >freebanding or power levels, and I can't prove

>.it, it becomes libel (Assuming you really aren't

You have no way of knowing what someone, such as myself, does or doesn't. Because you mistakenly believe everyone that posts from webtv is the twisted who rang your bell and a sock puppet, doesn't make it so. Because you weren't aware roger beeps were legal, did not make them illegal, as you ignorantly maintained. Because you denied the existence of a federal DOT, didnt alter the reality of it.

>If, on the other hand, I monitor you doing it, or >you brag to other people that you do it,

Wrong again. I can sit here and tell you I robbed banks, killed Kennedy, was single-handedly responsible for the theft of the Star of India, and broker counterfeit Monets,,,it means shit,,,,,,of course,,,except to you, who has these warped beliefs regarding legalities responsible for so many errors in your comments.

>then you are engaging in a criminal activity. _

Only a court of law can refer to one as a criminal, and yes, the fact that one has NOT been caught yet (as you tried and failed with) most certainly abdicates them from being referred a criminal,,,,,again, the fact that you disagree with our justice system is YOUR bad.

>Yep, the old subversive ploy of thinking that "

>it's only guilty if you're caught" mentality.

Actually, the fact that one is only guilty when assessed by a court of law, is not a mentality, David, it's US law reality. This mentality you speak of, is all yours. The law,,,, is reality.

>Typical of all slackers and scofflaws.

And your comments are typical of those consumed with hate and those of little tolerance for all but your own beliefs.

(Nope, it's called a guilty conscience, to which you can only be called guilty in front of the lord all-mighty)

>Isn't that enough?

(If you conscience bothers you, yes.)

>If you are of sound moral principles, then it >should.

What you profess as sound moral principles, ranks right there with your denial the legality of roger beeps, the denial the existence of the federal DOT, and your claim there is no federal speed limit (there is, and it governs all commercial vehicles).

> If not, then you start bordering on

>.sociopathic tendencies.

The law disagrees with you.

(You can't serve time and be branded a "criminal" until found guilty in a court of law.)

>But the fact that you might get away with a >crime, doesn't lessen what you truly are.

But the fact that you claim internet babble is the same thing as a guilty plea in a court of law, most certainly governs when you may or may not publicly refer one as a criminal.
Referring to a person proper as a criminal based on what -you- believe is one's internet identity and what they may have posted, illustrates, no,,,"screams" ignorance regarding your knowledge of the law.

>Playing word games doesn't hide that fact.

(Playing with meanings doesn't hide the fact either Dave, that's why they are called suspects, not criminals.)
Once again, this is to accommodate a person's presumption of innocence in the course of due process .

>And once again, if you

>witness a crime, you don't need a jury to tell >you what your senses already did.

And once again, -your- (non)senses alone are not proof by any definition, and are irrelevent except/unless directed by a court of law.

(Oh, by the way, that ham operator using the foul language and threating people, his callsign he was using was N3CVJ. By you're logic, that alone should brand you a criminal.)

>No, since I did not do it,

Holding with your logic, if one posts here with your call sign and spoke of such activity, it would make them a criminal. You haven't a clue, David, despite more and more people educating you each day.

>and the distance between us makes it very >unlikely that you heard me. Now, if I stated >that I did it and/or you witnessed ME doing it, >and you could positively identify me, then you

>.could factually make that statement.

Wrong. Especially concerning radio laws. The FCC can NOT prosecute unless one of their agents witness the act. You can cry all day in your spilled, spoiled milk about it, but it will not change the facts of the law, of which you are unable to learn. The bottom line responsible for maiming your psyche, is that you can not refer to one as a criminal unless they were convicted in a court of law. It's comical watching you attempt to explain the opposite of what our laws hold, and hypocritical for one who invokes the law so much,,,except, of course, in instances such as this where you disagree with the law, then it suddenly becomes about -your- perceptions and beliefs and no longer about the law. Not only do you epitomize the now widely-accepted "some of those licensed in communications seem to know the least about it and express the most difficulties", but serve as a perfect example of those who like to fancy themselves skilled in a certain area, but are completely lost and inept regarding the subject that mesmerizes them so...in this case, the law and its components.

Hi. I have a cb unit mounted on a motorcycle. it is a J&M, linked here, http://www.jmcorp.com/SeeProducts.asp?PF=24 , using the 3 foot Wilson antenna on the page.
It's a pretty decent unit (kinda expensive, mine came with another bike) and can be operated without looking at it, a good thing on a bike. I use it to talk with other riders, but the maker says about 1/2 mile is all the range I should get. On a straight piece of road it gets tough to use at 1 mile.
The reason I am told is that the bike has no ground plane, but I don't know whether that affects reception or transmission. What's the story here?
I know Linear amps are a no-no, but I don't intend on doing skip, using it often, or even talking much to base stations and truckers, and certainly don't want to run some giant power unit that stomps on others transmissions, but would be interested in using a small linear to boost transmission to a max range of about ten miles, an acceptable distance when traveling cross country with other bikes. Can any of you recommend what wattage would be sufficient for this use without going overboard? Some of the problems to be dealt with are a limited charging system, the inability to space wires far from current and ignition units, and physical size. I would prefer to build my own unit, rather that pay big bucks for garbage made in china. I have seen schematics for sale for 30, 50, and 100 watt units. Know of any free sources?
Other that a lecture on the illegality of linears, Do you have any useful advice?

I educated you on your mistaken definition of "empirical" evidence, Frank educated you on your mistaken..well, on a lot of your mistaken claims regarding radio, but most recently, of your embarrassing gaffe regarding the incorrect definition of "forensics", something you erroneously claimed you use in addition to empirical evidence. In fact, you have been educated on a host of things by a host of people. Now Lancer is providing your education concerning what you do not know about antennas. Yes, Dave, despite your denials, you most certainly have been educated by several of us.

>It does and it is.

It doesn't. An inability to distinguish between federal, criminal, and civil acts displayed by yourself is not shared by anyone else, only you.
You are assuming all rules and laws governed by a federal agency are criminal and this simply isn't so. Your error, is you mistakenly believe the term "federal" can be interchanged with the term "criminal" wehn especially regarding legalities, but I have learned to be content watching you deny existence of the things of which you are not educated.

>The FCC (a FEDERAL

So does the Federal DOT.

> The fact that you haven't

>.been caught yet does not change that.

Yet, the fact one hasn't been convicted of such DOES change -yourmistaken position. The fact that you disagree with the US laws and justice system that does not allow anyone to refer to another as a criminal unless they are found guilty and pronounced as such in a court of law, is irrelevant, as it again is your ignorance responsible for your mistaken belief.

>Once again you base your mistaken opinion

>on technicalities and semantics.

What you call technicalities is the basis and foundation for our judicial system. It's not perfect, but it works much better than your pronouncing one a guilty criminal based only on your ignorance.

>Someone who murders someone is still guilty

>of a criminal act regardless if he's been caught >yet.

Not if they haven't been convicted by a court of law. This is the ONLY manner in which one can be "guilty" and called a criminal in the US. To do so without the adjudication of guilt makes on guilty of slander or libel, depending on the medium used.

>Being pronounced guilty is only a formality.

Says you, but you are wrong. It is THE ONLY basis for guilt.

>The same holds true for the FCC rules.

Only a court of law can refer to one as a criminal, and yes, the fact that one has NOT been caught yet (as you tried and failed with) most certainly abdicates them from being referred a criminal,,,,,again, the fact that you disagree with our justice system is YOUR bad.

>Yep, the old subversive ploy of thinking that

>."it's only guilty if you're caught" mentality.

Again, your problem is with your disagreeing of the US judicial system.
This is not MY idea, Dave, this is the way our system is designed and you have a problem with it. Get past your personal problems that have you misperceiving the law as a mentality instead of the reality you can not grasp.

>Typical of all slackers and scofflaws.

Again, take it to your congressman.

>There are no federal traffic cops.

Umm,,,there is. That is exactly what DOT officers are. In addition to the usual laws they enforce regaridng commercial carriers and transit, they are not LIMITED by them. A Federal officer may enforce ANY law in this country. Keep talking, Dave, as you continue to be educated.

>There is no federal speed limit.

This is your counter to your incorrect claim that there is no federal DOT? Man, you are a glutton for punishment. Sure there is, David, truckers must abide by it every day. As I said,,,keep talking.

>I have a cousin who's a lawyer

Hehehe,,,as I said,,,off you go now.
You find it important enough you feel you must mention you have a cousin who is a lawyer, but no identification, resutling in you not providing for your claim.. You found it important enough to claim you have a friend who was busted by the fcc, but will not provide for the claim. You feel it important enough to claim you have cops who are friends who gave you the wrong definition of Pa law, but of course you will not provide for the claim. You find it important enough to claim you went to a tech school, but will not provide for any claims. It's your pattern, David.

>Far be it for you to chastise anyone for not >providing for their claims when you can't even >reveal your own name.

Stay focused, Dave. By now, everyone understands your need to become personal when you are forced to learn, but it's off topic and serves only to illustrate your incompetence and lack of communication skill.

>You who claims to embrace the concepts of >anonymity. You want me to give you personal

>information,

No Dave,,,you -chose- to give us personal info regarding this subject, .your claim was unsolicited.

>yet you can't even come from >behind that clock of gutless anonymity.

Gutless is the threat you made about coming to "give you what you want". Reviews of that thread show how yellow you are and what a coward you have become, as well as the lies you made concerning your threats.

>Stick to fishing. It's probably the only subject

>you know anything about.

I also know boats, and that you were seen coming a mile away when you bought yours.

>Oh, this should be good.

Your education is always regarded as good,,,except, by yourself, and this is only because it pains you to be proven wrong..I was going to say "by myslef" and then considered saying"by cbers", but you have shown that all who prove you wrong, bring you great pains.

>Another subject

>where I'll clean your clock and not even break

>a sweat. What could you possibly know about

>my boat or any boat in general?

...asked the landlocked wannabe who gets maybe two, three months use per year of his boat. Yes, David, again, your hands-on experience over the years with your boats in Pennsylvania adds up to,,what...how many months? LOL. Even if you multiplied 4 months per year of your experience (and that's generous) for the last twenty five years, that gives you a total of what,,,,,,100 months experience? That's less than 10 years experience and it's not even consecutive.
You're still green and a lightweight, but your self-proclaimed experience regarding such, is my brass ring. In fact, all areas which you have professed unsolicited proficiency to the group, have been decimated by others who do understand the subjects you fancy yourself knowledgeable. That list is growing rapidly.

Right, which is what separates you from them. I didn't invite them, or challenge them. They decided to single me out for some reason. Well, if they decide to come here, then they are fair game.

I want to do it this Saturday. But I first have to take care of some flood erosion from that storm last week. I had a shitload of soil washed away, so I had 3 dump truck loads of fill delivered, and I am shoveling it by hand. Hopefully, this fill won't wash away, since it is a clay mix. I have completed about half of it. Man, I could use a John Deere tractor right now.

I'd rent a bobcat and consider some bull-nut 1's and 2's stone to heal that problem for good. You can move and grade -tons- of material for about $300 a day rental, that machine is slick.

You can soil over it if you must grow something there.

No I really don't, Chris. It seems like you jump all over me everytime
I show dogie what a fool he is. I'm really easy to get along with, in fact I can't tell you how many hams email me from this NG since there's too many to count, and they don't want to be part of this pissing match.

I'm only here for friends and radio which is usually one in the same.

Time for your next lesson, Dave:

The decibel is the unit of measure in a comparative quantification system that establishes a value in relation to a specified 'standard' or 'reference'. In the case of antenna gain, the measurement is compared to either an isotropic antenna or a 1/2-wave dipole in free space (neither of which, FYI, are obtainable in the real world). A measurement in reference to the isotropic is labelled 'dBi', and when referenced to the dipole the label is 'dBd'. Look up antenna specs and you will see that both references are commonly used. Actually, dBi is more common because it gives higher numbers, which works better from a marketing perspective.

Now to say that "a dipole has "0 dB gain", or even "unity gain", means absolutely nothing because there is no reference. Even if you include the reference but the reference is to itself, that's no better than saying that an inch is equal to an inch -- even more meaningless. And just so you are very clear on this, a dipole (1/2-wave Hertzian) has a gain of 3 dBi -ONLY- in the direction of maximum gain; and again, that gain is realized -only- in free space. That being said.....

Antenna gain in the -real- world is first measured as field strength, then that value is compared against the calculated equivalent field strength of a free-space dipole and/or isotropic radiator. Here's the shocker, Dave: If you do that with a 1/2-wave dipole you will find that it does -not- have a gain of 3 dbi at the point of maximum gain for the simple reason that it is not in free space. IOW, your dipole with "unity gain" is nothing more than a theoretical fantasy.

Yep, you get yourself into a lot of trouble with your assumptions.

>Only an idiot would run 200 feet or more of open 450 Ohm ladder line.

Then there are a lot of idiots in this world, since most transmission line runs longer than 200 feet are usually some sort of ladder line or twin-lead as their attenuation is significantly lower than that of most types of coax. And I don't think many hams use 3-1/8" pressurized line, do they?

>Unless of course, you don't care about feedline radiation and RFI

Ladder line is a balanced line -- it won't radiate unless the load or source is unbalanced (assuming it's used at a frequency with a wavelength significantly larger than the spacing).

The antenna worked fine for me. If you couldn't get it to work then there's probably a reason that stems from your technical incompetence, which really doesn't suprise me -- this may be one of the simplest antennas that a person can make, but only -you- could foul it up with all your assumptions and distorted theories.

That's funny, Dave. Just a couple posts ago you were whining about me saying; "You will sit there and tell people, who do these things every day, exactly why they can't possibly work." Now you are doing what you claim I do (but never have). Once again you have proven your own

Maybe if you had a Cushcraft CFB-8 you could have spent several years switching between horizontal and vertical, and seen for yourself that sometimes vertical is noisier than horizontal and sometimes it's the other way around. (The ice storm in '96 took out my Cushcraft, the rotor and the tower -- makes me sad because it was probably the best CB antenna I ever owned).

Actually some of them do, although maybe not "officially".

Long-wire antennas can indeed be awkward, but sometimes an opportunity presents itself that can't be ignored. Maybe you don't have farms near where you live but there are plenty around here, complete with wire fences. And there are also mountains to go camping, some of which have very nice slopes that are ideal for a long-wire or rhombic.

But like I said before (and you conveniently snipped), antennas are reciprocal. IOW, I don't need to have a license to receive on -any- band. I do a lot of SWL if you haven't guessed by now. Regardless, I have used long-wire antennas for transmitting on HF in the USMC, on the CB, and a few Part 15 experiments on HF, MF and LF. They work just fine -- for their intended purpose.

>Exactly. Other than the military (Which doesn't have the time to play >with gimmicky wire antennas)

Not only was there plenty of time to play with antennas, it was part of the training -- after all, what do you do when your antenna is destroyed by gunfire, shelling, or bad weather? Just sit there and sulk? Hell no, you scrounge some wire and run up a new antenna! The job is to maintain comm in the worst possible conditions. That means we spent a LOT of time "playing" with antennas. And it's a great way to pass the time when there's nothing to do, which happens quite often on field ops -and- in garrison. And near the end of the pay period when you don't have enough money to go to the stripper bars, you'd be suprised what kinds of things some of us used to occupy our liberty time. Myself, I liked the MRC-110 so much I decided to build one. So when I was at Lejeune I built a 4-400 linear for my CB that I stashed in the back of the Volare SW. It was a big hit with the local REACT folks, although I never did get the auto-tuner finished.

The military doesn't have time to play with antennas? Damn, you sure are dumb, Dave!

I really don't care about your fantasy world, Dave -- you said I don't have any experience. You are wrong. If you want to count years then I can point out several hams who have a lot more years on the air than you and haven't learned any more than you have, and some kids who don't have any license at all and know more than both of us put together. You think time is the measure of knowledge? It isn't, not when you don't spend that time wisely and learn something from all that "experience". And in all those years of experience you claim to have, you still haven't learned one very important thing: There are other people who are smarter than you. You like to play the old salt when some bright, young whipper-snapper comes along because that gives you a sense of self-importance, making you think that you are the center of his attention. You aren't. Neither am I, but you can't bear the thought of someone else like me hogging the glory of your years of technical accomplishment. Well, get used to it -- there -are- smarter people than you, with more experience than you, and with a better education than you; and unlike you, some of them have an open mind to learning things they might not have learned the first time around the block.

Weak? You just said that a tuner is necessary for a tube amp to work.
Neglecting any unlikely variations, you are correct. Yet this is in direct contradiction to your previous statments because the built-in tuner is practical not just from the standpoint that it's required, but that such amps usually tune over a wide spectrum that covers several ham bands, which is one of the reasons I suggested to Vinnie to build an antenna with a tuner. So if your argument about tube amps isn't favorable of my suggestion to use a tuner then I don't know what is. (And I can't believe you didn't see that trap even -after- I told

Speaking of "fancy obscure terminology", why don't you take a crack at "bird watts"? If I were to say, "it's part of a bigger picture", would you say that's a fair explanation for the operation of a grounded-grid triode? Are you part of the crowd that thinks class-C amps are linear?
How do you get the flyback effect without a resonant output tank? You Random? No, Dave, those suggestions were not picked at random. The voltage regulator was nailed down by myself and Lance (and someone else too, I think) because the symptoms pointed directly to it. And in case you missed the results of the test, the regulator output was indeed bad. So either we got really lucky (all making the same

Same difference -- you are using a quantification of your experience as the measure of comparison with no regard to qualification. You have 30 years experience with CB, so automatically you conclude that you are "more informed" than someone with 29-1/2 years experience. Time for another lesson, Dave: Just because one man has more money than most people, that doesn't mean his life is any richer than theirs. Or haven't you been watching the news lately?

>My beef with your education is your over reliance on it

Well now that's -beyond- stupid, Dave. What good is an education if you can't rely upon it? If I know certain facts, does that mean I should disregard them even when they are relevant? Or should I disregard them just to make you feel better about your -lack- of education?

> and how you
>hold it up as some sort of badge of honor,

Maybe because it -is- a badge of honor. It's not something I simply bought at the grocery store, it's something for which I worked very goddam hard. I EARNED my degree. And since you have no idea where I'm coming from I can tell that you DIDN'T.

delivery of alcoholic beverages.

What makes you think my truck isn't dependable? Consider that I'm no fan of Chevy to begin with, then know that this truck has NEVER failed to start on the first turn of the key, even when the shop didn't get the distributor cap locked down and it popped loose. It has run in temps from -10 to 110 degrees, in rain, snow and ice, I've taken it over the passes in the Cascades and Rockies several times without even a groan, twice with a trailer, pulled a couple -newer- SUVs out of the snow, towed a couple other cars, and all -after- it was hit. Yeah, it's an ugly truck, but I wouldn't dare drive a new car in this town especially after getting hit 17 times, which is why I don't drive the Dodge (which is more than twice as old yet still runs like new).

So once again you have no idea what you are talking about, Dave.

No smoke or mirrors, Dave. The problem is that you can never admit when you are wrong. You were wrong about roger-beeps, you were wrong about speeding laws, you were wrong about capacitors, you were wrong about non-resonant antennas and tuners..... the list is almost endless at this point. But hey, it's not like you really -want- to make your life easier by simply keeping your mouth shut about things you know nothing about. You just can't resist pushing your way into the center of the discussion whether by your electronic trouble-guessing, legal assumptions, political propoganda, or during an ensuing argument. But that's just the way you are, Dave. It's all summarized in the analysis
I did about your personality disorders.

-any- facts. I have. Unlike you, I don't hide anything about me.
Consequently, my claims are far more credible than yours. That's how to play the credibility game. You lost the game a long time ago, Dave, and just like any other Gore loser you can't accept defeat. So you hang around the board and keep playing your own little game, not realizing that the real game continues despite you, and that you are tolerated simply because you won't go away.

Forget about legalities -- the bike probably couldn't handle the current of an amp. The problem is the lack of a ground plane. The bike just isn't big enough to provide a good ground for the antenna. I know of one solution but it requires a bit of shop work: Use a longer antenna, and mount the bottom as low to the ground as possible, just a few inches from the pavement, maybe on a bracket hanging from the rear fender. The close proximity to the ground itself will provide a fairly decent ground plane for the antenna even without a direct electrical connection. I did this with my brother-in-law's Yamaha 1100 and it worked great (well, it worked great the second time -- the first time I mounted it too far to one side and it got scraped in a turn).

That's the best suggestion I have without getting a ham or GMRS license and using a higher frequency.

Not much, that's part of the problem, length of the antenna is the other.
You sure as hell can't throw a larger antenna, it would look totally stupid.

Not going to happen, your bike alt sys couldn't handle much more than what you are already running, so the box is out. Also, the problem with your theory is that, even the other bikes would have to have boxes, otherwise they could hear you, but you couldn't hear them.

Again, take your charging sys total output, now take all of the accessories total amperage, add the amount of amps the box would draw and I would suspect that your alt won't be able to handle it.

Here's a couple of links, there are dozens more that offer a wide variety of products for your needs.

In this case, I am not concerned with the determination of the law, but with the truth. A criminal who beats the rap, is still a criminal in my eyes. Note that I'm not talking about a truly innocent person here, but one that I know is guilty and who beat the rap due to a technicality or some other mitigating circumstance.

A criminal might fool the flawed legal system, but he still has to face his maker one day.

Again, you are wrapping yourself in the semantics of the law and lulling yourself into a false sense of security. If you do the crime, but don't get caught, you are still technically a criminal, whether or not that "badge" can be legally applied to you.

I'm not sure that's the law in every state. Even if it is though, your earlier ratio of 4 out of 10 people no longer applies since most speeders don't exceed the speed limit by more than 20 MPH

I've never known anyone who went to jail for simple speeding, jay-walking or littering. Now if the speeding charge was in conjunction with something else like a DUI or a vehicular homicide, well, that's a different story.

> Those summary offenses do

Not in my state. Littering carries a $300 max fine, and no jail time.

If you are willingly engaging in a criminal activity, then you are technically a criminal regardless whether you've been caught yet.
Again, you are arguing semantics. A conviction only makes it official in the eyes of the law. Conversely, not being caught does not diminish the severity of the criminal activity you have chosen to undertake.

>> But you know as well as I do that the

I don't want to get side tracked by the seeming conflict in the evidentiary methods to determine civil liability versus criminal liability. If one is cleared of a criminal charge, then they should not be liable civilly either. But we both know that this is not the case. In the O.J Simpson case, he was criminally found not guilty, but in a civil court he was found to be responsible for the "wrongful death" of Ron Goldman and Nicole. So here we have a guy who's not a criminal, but still responsible for the death of 2 people. Logically that just doesn't make sense.

>Oh please Dave, that's crazy talk, sociopath tendencies.

What's crazy about it? Sociopaths exhibit a clear lack of conscience.
That is well documented. But like most things in life, human psychology is not a black and white issue. Most of us have varying degrees of personality traits which fall on a scale somewhere. We are considered "normal" if those traits fall into line with established norms. A sociopath has little remorse, or guilt for the things that they do. Other people are troubled by the simplest transgression that they may inadvertently do. Someone who falls closer to the sociopath on the conscience scale (Sociopathic tendencies) would be less troubled by transgressions against society.

Exactly. Any time a police officer is called to your house, an incident report is filed. Every time a person is arrested a report is filed. That is just SOP.

I think you are still missing the point a bit. I'm not talking about accusing an innocent person of a crime. I'm talking about people who are clearly and willingly engaging in criminal activity, who try to justify their criminal behavior by claiming that they're not really criminals because they've managed to evade prosecution. As if that makes it ok. But the act is the same whether they're caught or not.

But the difference is that I'm not here bragging about all the people
I jam on a nightly basis on ham radio. I'm not involved in criminal activities. The people I make reference to as "federal criminals" are those who admit to running in violation of FCC rules. I have never accused anyone who hasn't claimed the same.

Yes, it's deliberately done with a bit of a shock value. It's to counter the rampant mindset that someone isn't really doing anything wrong simply because the FCC is too incompetent and understaffed to catch them yet.

Being around money and celebrity does some strange things to people's judgement. Also some people are really dense when it comes to the true potential ugliness in the world.

You were challenged to provide proof, and you continually fall back on happen. Absence of evidence is not evidence of absence.

This is the exact tactic you played with me regarding the Roger Beep issue. How come you don't like the shoe when it's on the other foot?

I've provided PA statute 3368, which substantiates my claim in the vast majority of cases.

I went to far more than that. But until you tell everyone who you are, you are the epitome of hypocrisy to demand accountability from other people when you won't even identify yourself.

No it focuses attention on your true hypocrisy. You who demand that others provide for their claims, while you yourself hide like a sniveling child behind a cloak of anonymity. You haven't earned the right to demand accountability from anyone as long as you are too yellow to reveal yourself.

That was no threat, it was a challenge. Something a real man would not back away from. You are simply too afraid to reveal yourself. Which then begs the question of what you are hiding.

Well Dave, I'm not going to continue, it's fruitless. In closing you can go on your crusade against the FCC scofflaws, but their "crime" as you like to put it is very minor. If they are using Freeband or amps, their actions are much less of a consequence. Litterbugs add tons of garbage that costs millions a year to clean.
Speeders cost millions a year to enforce against and kill hundreds of people while causing accidents because of speeding.
I just find that there are more important things to worry about than someone that's using power or talking on the freeband. I worry about speeders maybe hitting my kids, drunk driver hitting someone I care about, drugs in my kids school etc etc, not about labeling someone a criminal for using a linear or freeband. You can go around and see sociopath and anarchist around every corner, I fore one am going to worry about what directly will affect my family, not what is illegal and not going to affect virtually anyone such as freeband use and linear.

What criminal charge would I be liable for? There is no "crime" for stating that someone is a criminal. There is that little thing called the 1st amendment. You know, that little provision that allows nutcases and fruitcakes alike to spew all sorts of hate, rhetoric and nonsense. There might be a civil action depending on the conditions and the people involved. The National Enquirer and other tabloids are full of people who would like to sue, but for some reason don't. What crime would I be guilty of?

>>Speeding is not considered a criminal offense.

Ah, there's a difference. If you are operating a legal part 95 type certified CB radio on authorized CB channels, and you talk some DX, I would be inclined to agree with you. You would be in violation of a minor rule, which would amount to a slap on the wrist.

However, once you set foot on the freeband, you lose your authorization by rule to operate a transmitter, and you are no longer considered a CB'er, but an unlicensed pirate radio transmitter. Operating an unlicensed transmitter on a frequency which you are not authorized for, is a far more serious offense, than simply DXing. It's not the DX'ing that will get you popped on the freeband, it's operating an unlicensed transmitter.

So, basically, you summed it up quite nicely, and anonymous non-person admits to partaking in a criminal activity. So where's the problem? Is this non-person engaging in criminal activity or not? The fact that he hasn't been tagged by a court is irrelevant.

They deserve what they get. If people want to pretend to be things

"cartoon characters" do not really exist.

You can't have it both ways. Anonymity cuts both ways.

I'm the one laughing. At you for getting your panties in a knot

Nope. Not a chance. You'd have to prove actual damages. But first you'd have to prove that "twistedhed" (or whatever other sock name you use) is a real entity and subject to defamation.

Your anonymity is your enemy at that point.

Do you think tabloid newspapers would be in business if it was THAT easy to win a libel case?

You know nothing about the reality of law. You, like Frank, read words, but can't apply them in the real world.

No, I don't. But if you admit to operating on the freeband, then you different. You can hide from the law, but you can't hide from yourself truly feeble excuse and poor justification for your anti-social behavior, and won't protect you in the court of public opinion.

This is not a court of law. This is the court of public opinion. The standards of guilt are much different. As long as we have imaginary identities, committing alleged crimes, I will call them on it as long as I need to. You don't like it? Too bad.

The 76 Goldwing has only a 350 Watt charging system. I have added a few things to the bike, like the CB, a GPS, a 90/130 Watt headlamp with high beam modulator, 5 tail lamps, and a little air horn, http://home.goldrush.com/obsoelyt/Horn1.jpg

http://home.goldrush.com/obsoelyt/Horn3.jpg
http://home.goldrush.com/obsoelyt/Horn4.jpg
http://home.goldrush.com/obsoelyt/Horn5.jpg
It seems to be ok, so far, the horn compressor added 4 A to the system, but doesn't run continously, and i understand an amplipfier doesn't use power unless you have keyed down.
I think i am going to install a headlamp kill switch, I don't need them when i am following someone, but usually i am in front navigating , and my new horns may make that position permanent.
Plan 1017 on this page,
http://electronickits.com/kit/plans/cbradio/cbradio.htm
looks promising, but it's most likely snake oil.
This one also looks like it could be adequate for the job,
http://www.quasarelectronics.com/1017.htm '
But I don't know if 25-30 Watts is going to do the job, but a 4-5 Amp load could be acceptable.
I will probably build 5 units for the people I regularly travel with, but even having some that can hear only is ok .
Moving the ant to ground level doesn't seem practicle, some guys tow trailers, and won't the bike block forward transmission? It would have to be centerline mounted, these mountain roads are all curves. We do a lot of 400-600 mile camping weekend trips, and in August spend 2 weeks on the road.

What, do you need the definition explained to you? Ok:

Which is why a dipole has an actual gain of 2.14 dbi, and not 3dbi. No one is disputing that.

So in other words, what you are saying essentially is that you can't trust any antenna gain specs, because the conditions by which they are measured are never guaranteed to remain constant.

You said it yourself (and I agree) that a db is a unit of RELATIVE measure. If I say that a dipole has unity gain, then it does, as compared to a reference dipole tested in real world conditions.

Yea, silly me for making practical assumptions. There must be at least one or two people who attach their radios right to their antennas without feedline..... You have a habit of trying to make a case based on the exception rather than the rule. Similar to what you tried to pull with the Pa. State speeding laws. You tried to invalidate my unused method of measurement, rather than admit you were wrong in the vast majority of cases. Even when the facts were presented to you, you continued to try to play that exception.

It was getting painful to watch you hold on to it.

I don't know of many hams who run any longer runs of ladder line than

You said it yourself, it's a simple antenna. Trying to discredit my findings by claiming that I screwed it up, does not detract from the reality of performance comparisons. The antenna was constructed correctly, the SWR was good, it was mounted properly, and it didn't work as well as a gain-type vertical. Plain and simple.

Yes it is. Resonance is a natural thing. A particular given antenna has a natural resonance point. Trying to make it resonant at a point other than that natural point is forcing it to resonance.

the 2 meter version.

There are limitations to the length of an antenna. Longer is not always better. Loading up a 40 meter vertical on CB isn't all that sweet either in the performance area.

A rhombic antenna has fantastic gain, but it's directional and cumbersome to move. Again, it's impractical for local CB use.

So how do you gauge relative antenna performance differences on a simple receiver. Differences of 1 or two S units would not be easily measured, especially on DX signals which constantly change with conditions. I used to SWL too. I got what I thought was satisfactory performance just hanging a long wire out of my bedroom window. But how do you quantify that?

THIS is your trap? Frank you need help. You are changing the application and attempting to make a direct comparison when there isn't one. I never said a tuner isn't useful. I said that a non resonant antenna forced to a match on CB will not work as well as an antenna designed for the band. There are no universal truths.
Situations are relative. Are you that desperate, that you need to start twisting words? That trick didn't buy twisty any credibility and it will do no more for you.

That's not a true unit of measure. It was coined by a marginally

It's tap dance terminology. Flyback effect has little to do with

Mark,

Please don't get me wrong here. I'm not on any "crusade" I'm simply pointing out a matter of fact with regard to what the people who break the law by operating out of band technically are. Once you key the mike on the freeband, you are breaking the law. A law which carried criminal penalties if and when one is caught. But that is only a formality.

If those who rabidly attack this truth would simply own up to their complicity in this area, then we can move on. As long as people live in denial, there will be no progress.

Personally, I don't care about freebanding or DX. Hell, some of my best friends are freebanders. I used to do it myself. But I am not trying to kid myself or other people by attempting to downplay what this activity is in the eyes of the law.

Do what you want. I'm not turning people in. I'm only pointing out what it is that they are guilty of.

Almost all radios have a diode right at the back of the power plug inside the radio.
If the radio does not work now check the diode, most likely blown. If it's not there it most likely shattered in tiny little pieces. You can do a quick check if it is there. Just jump it out and try the radio again. If your lucky, it will work. Replace the diode, if not and the radio still works, you run the risk of wrecking the radio when you son does it again!

Exactly. I know there are child support disputes that are hard to rectify and a few of my friends have been down that road but somehow it gets resolved one way or another.

The only guy I know that abused the system so bad that he got a court ordered head shrinker, and a felony out of it is N8WWM Doug Adair.

Stay away from the crowds and tourist traps. Buy a nice little fishing boat and charter it. Spend your afternoons getting some sun and having great looking native girls feed you pineapple by the slice while you laze away in your hammock.

What's wrong with that???

Actually it's the other way around -- you get a little bit better

You shouldn't have to mount it -that- low. But I agree with the other poster, you should think about GMRS or FRS. A lot of those FRS radios have jacks for headsets, which would be dandy for motorcycles.

It's a new episode every Sunday night a 9 but they do re-play it quite a bit during the week. It's almost as addicting as the Sopranos after you get a-hold of what is going down in the camp and all that is involved in the gold rush.

I think you will really like it if you can catch on to the charters.

Ishii was walking the ballpark. The Mets were hurt by the Trachsel injury, and had no choice. But having Zambrano and Ishii in the same rotation means to need a deep pen.

uh oh mets fans on the group. more attention is put on their starting rotation being hurt with crap to backfill than their supposed weak bullpen. last night was a nice 11 inning goose egg.

The reason some people don't know for sure
if they are going to Heaven when they die
is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven which is described in the Holy Bible as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or
pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple
it is to be saved so that we can live
forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus
is Lord and believe in your heart that God
raised Him from the dead, you
WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven
to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay
our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel
supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman
named Mary and lived a sinless life for
thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed
onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and in three days come back to life
again and it happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you. Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to
place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ
may never get another chance to do so
because you do not know when you will die.

This means that if you die without
trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever separated from
the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of
eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony
for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by
allowing Jesus Christ to save you today.
Only then will you have true peace in your
life knowing that no matter what happens you
are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

You "people" really get off the topic on these ng's don't you? Hear I am talking about using my radio on illegal frequencies and such and the topic turns to baseball? I wanna talk about using my CB illeglly, you know, on frequencies above and below the "normal" cb band and how to buy and use gear we're "not" supposed to have. Like Export radios and Linears and GOOD stuff like that, NOT BASEBALL for christ's sake. C'mon now lets talk about how to be REAL radio operators on the band (and let's not forget to use channel 19, that's 28.085 on some radios to talk the truckers on there. 10-4 good buddy? Breaker breaker.

What? You mean turn themselves in? millions of people arrest me". I'm sure they all sleep very soundly every night.

Most people , including myself, know they are going to HELL, but just want to pretend they are NOT. Since most people will end up in HELL, chances are, you will NOT be alone down there. But there is a very good chance the Heaven is a lonely place. Now pick your choice. LOL.

BTW: You can BUY a ticket to Heaven too if you have ENOUGH cash; just keep building Churches, Temples, Mosques and do a lot of charity. Then you might secure your place in Heaven. Why do you think Bill Gate is giving away BILLIONS of money, see what I mean. LOL

In the Real World, we have lobbyists; lobbying "the leader" to get hand-outs.
In the Religious World, we have religious people; praying to take them to Heaven.

Do you see the parallel? LOL

Mets fan? Hell no I say! I'm a Dodger fan. My list of Hate:

1. Giants
2. Yankees
3. Mets

Though the Giants are #1, the Yanks and the Mets are right up there. ;-)

DSP? Looks like an analog clipper to me.....

For starters, set the voltage of your center rail (your "6.2 VDC bus") with a voltage divider because the zener can make the op-amps lock up on power-up, and any noise on the power supply is going to get amplified like mad. For the same reason, don't isolate your inverting inputs from DC -- tie them to the center rail with a high value resistor (except for A2, more on that later). 1 Meg is fine and shouldn't degrade the operation of the circuit. Add another 1 Meg to ground on the mic side of C2 to prevent static noise when using a crystal or ceramic mic (or any other mic that is DC isolated, such as some power mics). Back to A2: ground the NC end of VR1 and feed A2 from the wiper (through R3) to keep the input impedance high, then replace the electrolytic C3 with whatever you are using for C4 so you can avoid polarity issues and prevent loading the output of A1 (which will screw with your frequency response). You might also want to try 1N4148 diodes in the clipper because they tend to behave better than 1N914 switchers. This will also allow you to scale up the value of the resistors in the clipper, and thus prevent overloading A3 (1K is a pretty heavy load for the LM324).

I probably missed a couple things. I'll look at it more closely later.

Oh yeah -- get yourself an audio signal generator so you don't look like an idiot by noting test voltages obtained from "loud whistling".
An old Heathkit or Eico shouldn't cost you more than $20 plus shipping on ebay. If you can't find one there, drop me an email and I'll sell you one of mine.

Yes... this circuit is a real piece of work. The distortion from this

A4 is a low-pass filter so it shouldn't be too noisy if the clipper is used in moderation. But I can say, just by looking at the schematic, that the frequency response sucks and it will have some major problems in a number of practical installations. The overall design looks like it was pasted together from a circuit scrapbook.

One more thing I noticed: The clipper circuit would be better located between A2 and A3. That way A3 can serve as a buffer between the clipper and the filter.

The center rail (the "6.2 VDC bus") is a virtual ground. Fixing the inverting input of A2 to this level prevents DC drift and/or lockup of A2. For the other op-amps, the addition of a 1 Meg resistor from the inverting input to this virtual ground provides the same protection.

I may not have explained that very well......

Strongsville has an out of the way beer joint. Mention was made about some short loud mouthed dude that stopped by some time back, couldn't remember exactly since it was a long time, after plowing snow for the night. Seems like the yahoo had a fantasy about screwing Paula Zahn while playing some Zeplin tunes on the stereo. Anybody you know in that line of work around there?

Strongsville has almost anything you need, Lelnad. Of course your first concern would be where the beer joint is when -you- get to town.

Short is relative, I'm 6 feet tall..... are you Lurch?

Snow plow drivers run -a- plenty in N Ohio but I'm not certain even a great plow driver like myself is capable of running coax cable as well as you.

The reason some people don't know for sure
if they are going to Heaven when they die
is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven which is described in the Holy Bible as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or
pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple
it is to be saved so that we can live
forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus
is Lord and believe in your heart that God
raised Him from the dead, you
WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven
to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay
our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel
supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman
named Mary and lived a sinless life for
thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was
scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed
onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and
was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going
to die and in three days come back to life
again and it happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you. Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to
place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ
may never get another chance to do so
because you do not know when you will die.

This means that if you die without
trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever separated from
the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of
eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony
for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by
allowing Jesus Christ to save you today.
Only then will you have true peace in your
life knowing that no matter what happens you
are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ
Ronald L. Grossi

The Death of John Paul II

John Paul II gained the whole world but forfeited his soul. Year after year he was the most loved and admired man in the world. The idolatrous veneration and adoration of this man was unprecedented. His devotees, who are now singing his praises, are probably ignorant of the strong rebuke of Jesus who said, "Woe to you when all men speak well of you" (Luke 6:26). Had the pope been devoted to Jesus Christ and His Gospel of grace, he would have been hated and persecuted by the world.
No one can judge John Paul's heart but we are all called to judge the fruit of our spiritual leaders. Clearly this man was blinded by the prince of this world and never saw the light of the gospel or the glory of Christ. I mourn the death of this man, not for the reason the world mourns, but because he rejected Jesus as God's only provision for his sins. I also have a solemn compassion for those who blindly followed this pope and his man-centered religion. My heart is painfully burdened to see so many "professing" Christians unable to discern truth from error and genuine Christianity from its counterfeit.

Paul, I'd check with J&B about how to set up a ground plane for the bike. Going with a dual antenna rig may also help. I tried that on my old R75/5 a few years ago and it seemed to help. I currently have a chatterbox tank bag unit that sort of works, but has the extremely limited range problem that yours has. Recently I've been trying out the FRS and GMRS radios with some success. Much more compact and not tied to the bike.

Don't know, but plan on throwing it in a heap of used CBs until I decide what to do with it. Second thought, maybe I'll mount it by my work bench and "maybe" start BSing on CB again - maybe I can get in with another group, or at least listen. I've been away from CB for so long, I really don't miss it. The old gang I used to talk to, are either all dead or off CB. It's not fun anymore. So, that's why I'm "trying" to sell off the CB stuff. Have no "real" use for it. Probably should have taken the top bid off the first auction. Oh well! You live and learn. E-Bay made enough money off me this month in listing fees if not final value fees also, I'm not advertising anything else on there for a while, unless it sells like hot coffee on a cold morning. Had a hot streak on there for a while, now turned cold. Will sit back for a spell. Tomorrow, is Flea Market day. Maybe I'll take it and the rest of them - there. Had a lot of takers on the last batch I took. We'll see. Anyway, thanks to any who may have shown interest.

I'm working in a slip-seat operation. My big ole Galaxy radio is just to big to lug around and the anteanna is a pain in the butt to set up each run. I'm looking to buy a very compact cb that isn't finicky about the pre installed cb anteannas and wiring found in most Freightliners. I need the radio to be compact so that I can just throw it in my bag and go. I've been looking at a Uniden ProXL 520 and at the Cobra 25 series. Any suggestions on which of these radios is the better of the two? Which one can be modded for a little better performance, etc? Any other suggestions on a good workhorse cb in a compact package?

It's been a long time coming, but finally I have to appeal to the general population to donate for me to continue my college education. I come from a low income home where college was never an option for my brothers and sisters. I have worked hard to get federal loans and state grants, but the ammount of money they make avaliable to me is just very low. I scored great on my SATs and got into a wonderful college that I love, but because of money I may not be able to continue. I know that 99% of you will pass this over, but I could use the help and I would appreciate as much as anyone could spare. Write you name in the donation list and I will try to thank you later on in life.

Here's a couple ideas.... A job - as someone else mentioned, loans on your name from a bank - they are usually deferred until you graduate, grants - if you qualify, internships, perhaps a scholarship. Your approach isn't much different than a pan handler in any city "I'm poor, give me your spare change". If you were as smart as you say, you'd have found a way to satisfy your tuition requirements. You probably would have had a or a couple "scholarships" given to you. There are public agencies to turn to. This BS about you " "TRYING" TO THANK" the donators' later on in life, is a crock. You'll forget the names as soon as you get the money. Many bust their ass to work and go to school. You won't be any worse for the wear and tear by doing the same. Melt the lead out of your ass, get out and do something. Also, if you're low income, ever think of "Community" colleges? They're a lot more affordable than many other schools. OR perhaps consider a "Trade" school. Get a degree or certification, get a better job and put yourself through college that way. We can't always have what we want.
You have to live within your means. So you have to start at the bottom and work your way up.... lots of people did that.
Does Pay Pal permit scams like this to be conducted through their system???????

drank all the beer,

then turned in the cans for the aluminum recycling REFUND, you would have had

I buit a quad several years ago for CB and worked like a charm. Had it set as a diamond. Cannot remember how I tied my 6' of TV coax in to make the antenna read 1/2 flat and 1/2 vertical. Know that one can set it as a square and go for either flat or horizontal if one doesn't have a turner on the driven end. Also have forgetten the measurement of the main beam the box (squared). Can anyone help me out on this project. Many thanks from a disabled vet.

I buit a quad several years ago for CB and worked like a charm. Had it set as a diamond. Cannot remember how I tied my 6' of TV coax in to make the antenna read 1/2 flat and 1/2 vertical. Know that one can set it as a square and go for either flat or horizontal if one doesn't have a turner on the driven end. Also have forgetten the measurement of the main beam the box (squared). Can anyone help me out on this project. Many thanks from a disabled vet.

My neighbor installed a CB radio antenna and now I am picking up his conversations via my computer speakers and answering machine. This has gotten to be a really big problem for me and my family. It even interferes with our fire radios.

Can anyone tell me why this is happening and how to fix it. (Short of going over and cutting the wires!?)

Thanks in advance,

Jade

Drop a .001 capacitor across the two wire of the phone line (red and green) at each jack, this should eliminate the rf on the phone, maybe cure the computer speakers (if the rf is comming through the phone jack to the modem.)
What is a "fire radio" ?????

The reason some people don't know for sure
if they are going to Heaven when they die
is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven which is described in the Holy Bible as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or
pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple
it is to be saved so that we can live
forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus
is Lord and believe in your heart that God
raised Him from the dead, you
WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven
to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay
our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel
supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman
named Mary and lived a sinless life for
thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was
scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed
onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and
was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going
to die and in three days come back to life
again and it happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you. Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to
place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ
may never get another chance to do so
because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said "I am the way, the truth and the life: no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but by me."
(John 14:6)

This means that if you die without
trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever separated from
the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of
eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony
for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by
allowing Jesus Christ to save you today.
Only then will you have true peace in your
life knowing that no matter what happens you
are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ
Ronald L. Grossi

*Show this to your family and friends so they can know that they have a choice
where they will spend eternity. Thanks!

It is the responsibilty of the CB'er to get rid of the interference, especially interference (if it is a) on a commercial "fire" radio.
Sounds to me that the CB'er does not have proper grounding or his antenna is too low.

What the hell does grounding have to do with interference, Antenna to low?
hell put it up 300 feet high this should help.
I bet he is using POWER, dam CBer.
Better yet get yourself a CB and put up a antenna , I bet he gives up as his receiver will be overloaded with your radio. Fight fire with fire as you know.

Transmitters of any type can create interference. It is not the responsibility of the CB'er to get rid of the interference as long as he is being legal.

No need to get pissy (.....and people complain about -my- attitude!).

My personal favorite is the Colt 357A, but 4 watts is 4 watts. Most CBers don't have Hi-Fi receivers so any difference in audio quality between stock radios isn't going to be noticed. Instead, get a GOOD mic and a GOOD external speaker. This will make more of a difference than anything, including modulation and/or power tweaks.

Speaking of tweaks, in order to double the range you need to quadruple your power; i.e, 16 watts to just double the range. So tweaking the radio for a couple extra watts won't make any measurable improvement, and half of that extra power will most likely be lost as harmonics that end up in someone's TV. Also, most CB "techs" are hacks that only recently learned how to plug in a soldering gun and use instructions found on the internet. They may claim to have X years of experience, but since the modifications are illegal you shouldn't expect much truth in their advertising, nor should you expect to get you money back if they ruin your radio.

Summarized: Flip a coin, leave it stock, then buy a good mic and speaker instead of a tweak-job.

First, communicate with your neighbor about the problem. If he refuses to fix the problem, file a complaint (in conjuction with your FD) with the FCC (www.fcc.gov) since he is interfering with an emergency radio communication service. If all else fails, talk to an attorney about the neighbor and local laws regarding nuisances.

Dh talked to the guy last night and wouldn't you know it . He is not using legal equipment! Some people!!

Needless to say for the pass 2 nights we have had no problems what so ever. I have made recodings of him conversatosn as they come over our speakers just in case we need it to prove us case. Dh said he was none to happy about finding out we could hear every thing (and I do mean everything) he has said. ^^

Why not link directly to the images, instead of providing a link with mountains of pornographic advertising? Not to mention that the images shrink to fit on the screen, instead of displaying full size so that you can actually see them clearly... Are you trying to get some "click-through" credits to porn sites?

No they don't. They also don't have echo and "feedback effects."

I very surprised that the FCC allows them to be type accepted. Yes I know that ham equipment doesn't have to be type accepted to be used on ham bands but it DOES need to be type accepted to be commercially sold.

If you are interfering with emergency equipment it's ALWAYS your responsibility to fix it. Even if it means stopping your transmitting altogether. Emergency equipment ALWAYS takes precedence.

It's more likely that the fire receiver and/or computer is not properly grounded. However it still isn't your responsibility to fix the problem.
Legal or not it's his responsibility since it's happening to emergency communication equipment.

I doubt he was causing interference on the whole band. Doesn't the rule specify frequency only? I will have to take a look.

No, it didn't. It just took time. Trolls aside, most people have a life outside the newsgroup. And remember that nobody here is under any obligation to give you advice, let alone jump at your command. If you don't get a response the first time you might try to exercise a little patience and ask again later instead of copping an attitude.

I looked thru the rules. I couldn't find anything substantial. I have part 97. I do not have the CB rules. Most indicate that if you are causing harmful interference to a band on which you are secondary, that you must leave the frequency. I am not sure, but in this case, he might just be overloading the front end of the fire radio. Sounds like the guy was attempting to correct the problem.

You know, I shouldn't have to site a "regulation." It's a no-brainer to those who will think about it. However it's not just an "FCC rule". It's illegal to interfere with any kind of emergency communication regardless of the source or method. If it's "unintentional" you are expected to either stop or fix the problem. If you need statutes I can find them from all levels and branches of government....or you can go look them up yourself.
Maybe you should do that, you might learn something.

Where Part 97 is concerned it does specify that we are secondary on some bands. On the bands where we are primary we are still to avoid causing interference any secondary users. We are also to have equipment that will not cause interference to adjacent bands. If your stuff is operating properly it's not real likely that you will cause interference to a fire or police radio (that is also operating properly). HOWEVER, if you are next door to a fire station and you are interfering with their equipment and don't do anything about it yourself it is most likely that the FCC will make a modification to your license reducing your power, operating hours or operating frequencies. It happens. (No Lancer I don't have specific examples but pick up some copies of QST.)

The ONLY mention and display of any confusion is from you, no one else.
Civil was when OJ was sued by a private party. Criminal was where he was prosecuted and found not guilty.

>the end of my question right?

What everyone else sees is way different than what you claim to see. The light is blinding you.

>Ah, so you don't know what a (?) is. That >explains much. Perhaps a remedial reading >course is in order. Then you can work on that >GED.

Yep,,you're well shaken.

>You are not capable of educating anyone.

I educated you when you denied existence of a Federal DOT.

>You provided nothing but your own >unsubstantiated claims.

Again,,you ignorantly inquired "What federal agency enforces traffic laws?" When you were taught the DOT does this, you ranted and began smoldering about what to call this entity of which you were not familiar, and embarassed yourself with "There are no federal police". Well, yes there are David,,the DOT employees in those cop looking cars are called DOT OFFICERS (more education for your half-wit) and the FBI, other agencies are certainly what you deny exists at all: Federal Officers.

>You hypocritically take me to task for offering >my experience as evidence, yet you provide >nothing to back your self up.

I educated
you concerning your shouted ignorance (for a month) that roger beeps were illegal.

>You provided no proof to back up what you >said. I had to get it myself from the FCC.

Everyone else, including myself, had this "experience" you continually defend on our side regarding the law and evidently made it our business to be educated and informed on the law. This was due our experience and familiarity with the law. You, on the other hand, was not only NOT familiar with the law, but hypocritically hold such personal experience as "no proof" when offered by others. LOL. What a card you are, but not a very bright one, despite Frank's initial assessment concerning your intellect. His reformed dissertation is very close to that of your shrink's.

 I educated you on your mistaken definition of "empirical" evidence,

>Which was wrong (as usual). Look up the >definition (I'll be glad to provide it again for you >so you can then claim that my dictionary is >"wrong")

You claimed "empirical observations" derived from your personal experience constituted proof. You then invoked your personal experiments confirmed your positions. It was then you were properly instructed that once experiments were undertaken by yourself, your position was no longer derived from "empirical evidence" and voided your original use of the word. But hey,,,off you go now to provide it for "me" (chuckle)..... again! LMAO!

 Frank educated you on your mistaken..well, on a lot of your mistaken claims regarding radio

>Frank has his own issues, most notably a >glaring lack of hands-on experience with CB >and ham radio.

No David, that would be your knowledge of the law governing your chosen hobby.
_
Most recently, your embarrassing gaffe regarding the incorrect definition of "forensics", something you erroneously claimed you use in addition to empirical evidence.

>My usage of the word "forensics" was >consistent with the definition. Frank had a >problem with that. But his beef is not with me,

>it's with those who write the dictionaries.

The difference wasn't with the dictionary, only your incorrect useage.

>But such illustrates Frank's pompous >arrogance in that he feels that he knows more >than those who define these terms.

Or those who actually know the law and try to teach it your arrogant and pompous self.
In fact,
you have been educated on a host of things by a host of people.

>I've had people who have disagreed with me.

>None have provided any proof otherwise.

It's more fun to watch you run around huffing and puffing with your lactating chest protruding for a few days and finding out your were ignorant all by your lonesome. Brass RING!
Now
Lancer is providing your education concerning what you do not know about antennas. Yes, Dave, despite your denials, you most certainly have been educated by several of us.

>None of you have provided any proof to back >yourselves up. What does that say?

It says no can tell David Hall Jr. anything because he believes he knows better than everyone else, even when a number of people are telling him the same thing. Wait till your daughter and Kimberly reads all this shit you post one day....they will be like "damn,,,and we thought he was just like that with us".

>Your legal and political views are akin to the

>.malcontents and subversive slackers of the >1960's.

The definition of the term has not changed, your personal feelings and bleeding from the gums, not withstanding.
You fecklessly insist such an act
(such as dxing) makes one a federal criminal.

>It does and it is.

It doesn't. An inability to distinguish between federal, criminal, and civil acts displayed by yourself is not shared by anyone else, only you. You are assuming all rules and laws governed by a federal agency are criminal and this simply isn't so. Your error, is you mistakenly believe the term "federal" can be interchanged with the term "criminal" wehn relating to the rules and laws they govern. This is your bad, Dave, not anyone elses.

>The real joke is that you don't even bother to >read the links your posted to the stories about >your boy "Bob Noxious". In them they state >that it's a criminal violation to operate an >unlicensed transmitter.

Tut-tut,,when you have been reduced to wandering, you tend to make invalid comparisons. What B-o-b does, and what I do (dx) are two very different items,

>No, they're basically not. Both of you are >running illegal transmitters on frequencies that >you are not licensed for.

When ever your head is in the sand or up another's ass and you are stinging from being wrong so often, you lob bullshit you pull from your ass and hope it sticks. My Ten-tec is more legal than your Dave made.

>The only difference >between the FM broadcast band and the >freeband is the frequency, and the visibility to >the public.

Hehe..no, Dave, you are dead wrong,,there are plenty of differences, especially regarding legalities, but I have learned to be content watching you deny existence of the things of which you are not educated. In fact, that statement serves as a reminder that some jackasses who are licensed for communications, such as yourself, know the least of it.

>Translation: You can't prove it, but if you >repeat it enough maybe >someone will believe you.

> The fact that you haven't

>been caught yet does not change that.

Yet, the fact one hasn't been convicted of such DOES change -your- mistaken position. The fact that you disagree with the US laws and justice system that does not allow anyone to refer to another as a criminal unless they are found guilty and pronounced as such in a court of law, is irrelevant, as it again is your ignorance responsible for your mistaken belief.

>Once again you base your mistaken opinion

>on technicalities and semantics.

No,,that's you desperately treading in your own fecal matter trying to find a way out of the darkness you conjured with the claim that there are no federal police officers when you had to be taught that the FEDERAL DOT enforces traffic laws..
What you call technicalities is the basis and foundation for our judicial system. It's not perfect, but it works much better than your pronouncing one a guilty criminal based only on your ignorance.

>.Denying the criminal nature of your acts >simply because you have not been officially >convicted is disingenuous.

.....and only the basis for innocent until proven and found guilty.

>Someone who murders someone is still guilty

>of a criminal act regardless if he's been caught
>..yet.

Not if they haven't been convicted by a court of law. This is the ONLY manner in which one can be "guilty" and called a criminal in the US. To do so without the adjudication of guilt makes on guilty of slander or libel, depending on the medium used.

>So it's your position that no crime was >committed until the verdict is in? That's sure >comforting to the families and friends of the >victims.

You're wandering.

>Being pronounced guilty is only a formality.

Says you, but you are wrong. It is THE ONLY basis for guilt.

>Officially yes.

Which is what we are discussing,,the law. Your opinion to disagree with it means shit.

>But if you did the crime, you are technically >guilty whether the law recognizes it or not.

Only in the eyes of those who do not embrace the US justice system.

>The same holds true for the FCC rules.

Only a court of law can refer to one as a criminal, and yes, the fact that one has NOT been caught yet (as you tried and failed with) most certainly abdicates them from being referred a criminal,,,,,again, the fact that you disagree with our justice system is YOUR bad.

>I'm not the one twisting the law in some vain >attempt at justifying illegal behavior.

Nope..you're the one using your ignorcane of the law as a basis for claiming things are illegal (roger beeps) and do not exist (FEDERAL DOT AKA and "federal police" AKA..(insert any number of federal agencies here).

>"You're only guilty if you're caught" doesn't >wash with me.

Watching you wander, it's apparent you don't wash at all.

>Typical of all slackers and scofflaws.

Again, take it to your congressman.

>There are no federal traffic cops.

Umm,,,there is. That is exactly what DOT officers are. In addition to the usual laws they enforce regaridng commercial carriers and transit, they are not LIMITED by them. A Federal officer may enforce ANY law in this country. Keep talking, Dave, as you continue to be educated.

>Until you provide the proof, you are simply >babbling a bunch of nonsense.

More ignorance from one who knows little to nothing of the laws and agencies in this country.

>There is no federal speed limit.

This is, countrary to your incorrect claim that there is no federal DOT.

>I never said there was no federal DOT. I said >that there are no federal traffic cops. Once >again you attempt to twist words.

No, that's not what you originally said,,,you originally said there is no federal agency that enforces treaffic laws. When you were taught otherwise, you spun words with your invocation of "federal police". Now you change it again to "federal traffic cop", yet, that is exactly what a DOT officer is...a federal traffic cop.
Man, you are a glutton for punishment. And there is mandatory speeds, truckers must abide by them every day. As I said,,,keep talking.

>As I said, put up the proof, or shut up.

I'm content watching you suffer.

>The federal 55 MPH speed limit was repealed.
>There has been no new limit to replace it.

>I have a cousin who's a lawyer

Hehehe,,,as I said,,,off you go now.
You find it important enough you feel you must mention you have a cousin who is a lawyer, but no identification, resutling in you not providing for your claim..

>.What difference would it make if I gave you >his >name?

The same difference of importance you apparently felt compelled to invoke such.

>You would then claim that I simply made it up.

>made it up.

Somebody else would have beat me to it.

>Speaking of names, what's yours?

You had your chance.
You found it important enough to claim you have a friend who was busted
by the fcc, but will not provide for the claim.

>I gave the particulars of the situation. Because >you could find nothing (assuming you actually >looked) doesn't mean that it didn't happen.

You should have applied this principle to yourself when you claimed because -you- were unable to find a law specifically permitting roger beeps, you were "forced" to consider them illegal. Your ignorance knows no bounds.

>Absence of evidence is not evidence of >absence.

This is the exact tactic you played with me regarding the Roger Beep issue. How come you don't like the shoe when it's on the other foot?
You feel it important enough to claim you have cops who are friends who gave you the wrong definition of Pa law, but of course you will not provide for the claim.

>I've provided PA statute 3368, which >substantiates my claim in the vast majority of >.cases.

Yet, according to you, this cop gave you incorrect information regarding the law of the state he and you reside.
 You find it important enough to claim you went to a tech school, but will not provide for any claims.

>I went to far more than that. But until you tell >everyone who you are, you are the epitome of >hypocrisy to demand accountability from other >people when you won't even identify yourself.

I ask no one for accountability. That is reserved for jackasses like you who see themselves as some sort of person who others need answer or explain their ways, too. All I ask of you is to provide for your claims, and again, as always, the first thing out of your fecal filled mouth is "but..YOU". LOL.

>providing for their claims when you can't even

>reveal your own name.

Stay focused, Dave. By now, everyone understands your need to become personal when you are forced to learn, but it's off topic and serves only to illustrate your incompetence and lack of communication skill.

>No it focuses attention on your true hypocrisy.

>You who demand that others provide for their >claims,

Not others, David, only you. as only you have been illustrated by no less than ahndful of regular posters as being hypocritical.

>while you yourself hide like a sniveling child >behind a cloak of anonymity. You haven't >earned the right to demand accountability from >anyone as long as you are too yellow to reveal >.yourself.

>You who claims to embrace the concepts of >anonymity. You want me to give you personal

>information,

No Dave,,,you -chose- to give us personal info regarding this subject, your claim was unsolicited,,you tossed it out there.

>yet you can't even come from

>behind that clock of gutless anonymity.

Gutless is the threat you made about coming to "give you what you want".

>That was no threat, it was a challenge.

>Something a real man would not back away >from.

So why did you, then? I see we need revisit that thread, eh?

>You are simply too afraid to reveal yourself.

Whcih is why when faced with no other out, you chose to stick your yellow tail between your legs and run from your "challenge". You claimed I asked for your credit card (only to secure a commercial trip) as our last exchange, but you lie. Our last exchange was when I offered to meet you at a specific location, and you claimed I wouldn't show. When I claimed I would take a picture of the day's paper (illustrating the date) under the clock tower where we were to meet, and post the pic online that day to probe I was there,,,you ran. You ran like the yellow cowardly cur you are and droped the thread. Need see it again?

>Which then begs the question of what you are >.hiding.

You're the one who continues to provide the FCC with a bogus address, even after being informed such behavior was illegal.

I also know boats, and that you were seen coming a mile away when you bought yours.

>Oh, this should be good.

Your education is always regarded as good,,,except, by yourself, and this is only because it pains you to be proven wrong.

>Which you have yet to do.

>You word alone does not constitute "proof".

Based on experience, and my familiarity with law confirms it (when compared to you), it most certainly does constitute proof,,at least, according to you,,but then again, everyone knows you dont play by the rules you spat.

>You psychologically challenged few have t >ried, but keep missing the mark. And that is >what frustrates you.

Frustrated? My goodness jr..I'm not the one crying and moaning like a bitch in heat about cbers personal identities,,,,that's reserved for losers like yourself.

>Another subject

>where I'll clean your clock and not even break

>a sweat. What could you possibly know about

>my boat or any boat in general?

..asked the landlocked wannabe who gets maybe two, three months use per year of his boat. Yes, David, again, your hands-on experience over the years with your boats in Pennsylvania adds up to,,what...how many months? LOL. Even if you multiplied 4 months per year of your experience

(and that's generous) for the last twenty five years, that gives you a total of what,,,,,,100 months experience? That's less than 10 years experience and it's not even consecutive.

>That was not the claim. You made a specific >claim about MY boat.

And you answered including "any boat in general.

>"Besides, you learned to walk what, at 13

>months or so?

Just because Kimberly's inability to stop smoking was responsible for your child's abnormal development, please don't take anymore of your personal frustrations out on the group.

> Does every year that you walk beyond those >first few make you any more proficient at

>walking?

You're still green and a lightweight, but your self-proclaimed experience regarding such, is my brass ring.

>What "self proclaimed" experience are you >talking about?

All of them. Heck, everyone in this group has proved you wrong on a panoply of subjects.
In fact, all areas which you have professed unsolicited proficiency to the group, have been decimated by others who do understand the subjects you fancy yourself knowledgeable.

>Not hardly. The fact that you try and fail >miserably just makes me smile. Even with the >emotionally troubled Frank in your corner, you >still miss the mark.

I'm not the one getting personal, or at least I wasn't until you did. Hell , you denying Kimberly T. as your wife alone makes you a scumbag..then again, it holds perfectly with your fears,,,such as continuing to provide the FCC with a bogus address.

My email is shut off except for those on my private email list.
Why can't you give us a name of the cber that you claim was busted for disorderly?
I know, that's a strange concept, but.... it's no stranger than your pathological lying for no reason other than to lie. I offered to email you as well concerning your dilemma

>I have no dilemma, except what you fabricate

>in your own sociopathic

>mind

LOL....uh......I didn't fabricate anything..YOU did..the cber getting busted..the Phelps.....probably everything else you ever said here.
I asked you about YOUR posts... Everything I asked about was in response to a post of yours.
Let us start again so you are able to comprehend it isn't in my mind but very much something in your mind you wish to forget, only I won't permit
it.
Can you explain how your email came by way via the University when you claimed that you only "borrowed" the account for a short time long ago?
Can you explain why it defaults to "Mark Salzyn" who appears to have been the other half of so many of your conversations?
How about the Phlelps comment? I asked if you still had the Phelps and you asked, and I quote "What Phelps? I wish I HAD a Phelps"..when it was shown you indeed lied in a post long ago by claiming you had one. A few days later you popped the lid on the cesspooole and say: "Oh, THAT Phelps..well, see...um...it.....itwashitbylightningyeathatsitand why icantremeberit"...
LMAO.....tell me Davey boy, does that shit work on the people you surround yourself with?

But you refused and proceeded to air your laundry in front of the group

>You attempted to "air" what you thought you >could make an issue of.

Not true, davey..I was the one that asked you many times to take your cries to email to AVOID making an issue in the group, to "avoid" airing your shortcomings and personal problems..everyone knows that Davey, I asked you many many times to go to email with your personal problems you bring to the group and you trying to lie about it now and say otherwise >serves only to solidify your pathological status.

The fact that you fail at every attempt hasn't stopped you from continuing.
Your posts. I merely questioned them...I can't help it if you went to pieces and came gunning for me with flames and personal offtopic attacks....that's in your upbringing..you weren't taught any better or you simply don't know any better..either way,,you suffer a deficit.

>I can't wait to see the next pitiful attempt.

Again, "your" posts, Davey boy. To agree with me at this time that they were failures is redundant. The "pitiful attempts" have been limited to you attempting but failing to explain away your lies.
Besides Dave, asking questions of anothers business is paramount to sheer hypocrisy when you refuse/are unable to answer questions posed concerning comments you uttered and are unable to 'confirm" any of them...this is why they are called "lies
".
>#1 I don't owe you an explanation for anything.
Nope, you certainly don't.
Merely carry on your little hit parade for yourself and I'll continue to point out the bullshit as I see fit. You are most correct, Mr. Hall, that in all instances, attacking me on a personal level and fancying yourself educated in the matter of all you can not comprehend, is certainly more constructive and conducive than offering analysis or basis for all which you claim.

>What I choose to provide is for me to decide.
But of course, although I'm having none of it and for some reason that just galls you to the point where you are single-handedly reduced to reckless off-topic insults and self-professed slightly comical images....that of an educated man, no less. You have proven yourself a pathological liar. You have nothing to prove to me or provide, Davey boy..but when you pathetically, habitually and pathologically continue to throw bullshit lies on the group to futher your own bullshit agenda, such as your claim of the cber near you getting busted for disorderly conduct, be prepared to answer questions on it. A claim like that is incredibly easy to disprove by anyone with internet access who knows what they are doing or to the super sleuth.....even an idiot can pick up the phone and make the call to the precinct to disprove your lying, lid, trolling hammie azz which is why your lying self got real quiet on this issue..you were busted...instead of acting like a man and moving on, you figure you're gonna get personal with me for calling attention to it..you're a child, Hall..and as always, you never let us down with your shining example of the worst of amateur radio...the perfect lid.

>If a serious, legitimate person requests

>your psychoses

A (ahem) "psychosis" has nothing to do with your pathological lying,
Dave, except that it is but one of many problems that ail you. Again, you have to provide for nothing,,as there is nothing to provide for.
Your claims are just like you..bunk. At least folks are considering the source when you post now.

>#2 the fact that something I said isn't >verifyable by your own feeble >means does not mean that it's a lie

My resources are anything but.
But you go on ahead and believe that I'm the only one that disproved your lie concerning that claim..as I said..a few clicks. a mere phone call, and you, my angry little lid, are as you have always been.....full of shit.

>Rather it speaks of your own inabilities, or >your clouded, obsessed >judgement.

What part of my judgement was "clouded" concerning asking you to provide a city, name, or year concerning your claim that a local cber was convicted of disorderly conduct? The part where I half-heartedly thought for once in your pathetic, pathological lying life you may return an honest answer?
Hmmm...so I see..... I know exactly just what you mean.

If you are feeling particularly adept at communicating today, I am not the only one to have expressed an interest in your claim of how you tamed the Davemade and TS into legality mode for your use on the freeband

>Only you and your sycophantic counterpart,

>Nebo has made any comments.

>I don't consider either of you to be worthy of >an answer

You don't have to answer, Davey boy,,your angry malicious hate filled post and attacks speak quite clearly, as do your claims you refuse to answer for even after you claimed you would..but that was before I drove a stake through your black heart.. We wouldn't expect anything less..it is how your type operate.

>And I have never used either amp on the >freeband. I use them legally >on 10 and 15 meters, where I am licensed to >do so

Ok, when did you mod the Dvaemade and ditto for the TS? Was it your equipment?
Surely out of all your claims you can choose and select better which to respond than those of which you have managed to already mangle yourself, eh? But thats ok,, a liar is a liar regardless of how many lies you tells.
--
The "majority" of the posts seem to disagree with your statement referring to them as legal amps for hammies

>That "majority" of posts that you refer to, have >been by yourself, so >that's hardly an objective poll

That's not true at all....but I wouldn't expect any correct information to escape from your bruised and damaged psyche. The posts I refer to were the conensus that the amps are illegal for hammies or cbers.

>George may be a bit confused on certain >aspects of the ruling, but >he's essentially correct, and no amount of >slander, on your part, can >change that

I offered to educate you further but you merely wind up shooting yourself in the foot and dining on the crow I precariously prepare for you.
Slander is spoken, libel is written, my precocious angry, little lid. You may continue to set forth the notion you have a bit of education, but your uncouthness quickly dispells with any such notion. Continue to make blunder upon blunder or you can learn from your mistakes and move on from them.

HAHHAHHAHAHA..LMAO..yea, Davey,,you really educated people on your bullshit...when you made this post, you had no clue what libel is, as you incorrectly accused me of slandering you in this group. As always, you know shit, dave..everything else, you lie about, boy.

You're getting warmer. I was cutting the grass with my Craftsman lawn tractor, and I ran over a nest of rabbits. I didn't see them until the second pass. I killed 1, at least 4 got away. I felt pretty bad about it. But there is nothing you can do. They are all over, and they nest just belowe the grass roots, so you can't see them unless you step on them.

Bah. I run them over all the time in my z-cart when we feed acres of turf at a time commercially. The furry freaks pick the damnedest places to build a nest..right in the middle of manicured turfgrass. I'm no bunny expert but my guess is that lawn works for quick food for the young'ins. I used to feel bad about it 20 some years ago.

And they have perfect camo. Wasn't pretty though. If they just stay in their nest when I run them over, nothing will happen. The blades won't reach them.

My yellow lab, shepard, greyhound mut outruns them and has em for breakfast. I swear I've never had a dog that can run and attack stuff as fast as this one. I only got him about 8 months ago after my wifes brother died from some really aggressive cancer. I already had a hound dog so I wasn't in the market for another mooch but what the hey. He's fun to throw the frisbee to, or a tree limb.

One of the first times my wife let him out of the house he bolted right for a running bunny, ate his head and brung the carcass back. lol

I finally have a weekday off tomorrow, so I can wait for the plumber.

Oh my God. We have more in common than we thought. My wife's brother died the same way. He was diagnosed on 9-11. Go figure. He died 13 months later, exactly 2 weeks from us returning from our honeymoon. He was 38. Worst yet, I had to watch his entire family, parents, kids (9,12), watch him take his last breaths. My wife was very close to him. She had 4 brothers. I think the biggest memory I have from that night, other than his kids watching him die, was the look on his father's face, who never left his side. This is something I would never wish on my worst enemies. You are not supposed to bury your kids.

My dog chases them, gets to about 5 feet, and then they explode like lightning. He is fast, but they are just too small and too quick. It might have gotten close if I didn't have a fence.

Man that's a tough row to hoe. This guy was a surgeon of sorts, he's the guy that has his hands in you and is handing the specialist the tools of the trade. He was some sort of an SA with the military and then he went back to school so that he could bill his services independent from the hospital.

It really struck me as ironic that a guy that had fixed so many people with surgery could die so fast, and there ain't dick the highest paid friends of his can do about it.

You're right about the kids too. I dunno what to say to them.

I suggest you make friends with a ham, and see what you are getting into...
I have been both, freebander/ham. I don't claim to know-it-all.
But, I do know what I seen. Hams are a super-critical bunch. Many (I would say most) feel themselves rather special. Indeed, they post their ham licence as if it were a PHd. It is a damn licence to have a hobby radio...
Any ham with even a modicum of a sense of humor will find his way to the CB bands, at least now and then.
Since they tend to feel themselves special, they end up "control freaks", attempting to control who gets a license and who does not--they are a picky bunch--and they may find you lacking to their standards.
Have you ever noticed, you can count the hams on your fingers and toes?
Their conversations remind me much of conversations I overheard as a youth--at my grandmothers' bridge games...
Like the guy learned who was given three wishes--becareful what you wish for...

Regards,
John

There are a lot of possibilities:

-- Bad speaker
-- Bad RF or IF receive section
-- Bad detector/discriminator
-- PLL not properly aligned
-- Listening to SSB transmissions while in AM mode
-- "With old radios like that, the problem is almost always related to caps drying out."

The problem is that it's nearly impossible to troubleshoot your radio with the little information you have provided. Best take it to a competent shop.

This was colon or stomach cancer. I can't recall. But it took him from a healthy well built individual, to a frail bone thin man, in 13 lousy months. I was wrong about when he died. It was 2 weeks after our wedding, not honeymoon. He did make it to our wedding, and stayed about 3 hours, which is incredible for the condition he was in. But you are right about the speed of decline. Specifically these pancreatic and stomach cancers.

Hello Floyd:

The receiver can be checked with a signal tracer or audio amplifier with a RF probe, the distorted audio can be isolated to the offending stage.

Distortion is usually a bias problem, but can be a speaker, bad connection at a external speaker jack, or again the wrong voltages somewhere in the radio.

Touch the middle terminal on the volume control, you should hear a hum, and if the hum is distorted as the received radio signals you have isolated it to the audio stages.

I have a cat too !

The cat was my wife's, and I married it along with her. The dog and cat never had a problem from the beginning. But that might be because my wife's cat is battle tested. It grew up with 2 pit bulls (my father in-law's).

2001. Good morning or good evening depending upon your location. I want to ask you the most important question of your life. Your joy or sorrow for all eternity depends upon your answer. The question is: Are you saved? It is not a question of how good you are, nor if you are a church member, but are you saved? Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die? The reason some people don't know for sure
if they are going to Heaven when they die
is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven which is described in the Holy Bible as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or
pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple
it is to be saved so that we can live
forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus
is Lord and believe in your heart that God
raised Him from the dead, you
WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven
to earth in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay
our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel
supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman
named Mary and lived a sinless life for
thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was
scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed
onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and
was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going
to die and in three days come back to life
again and it happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds) with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour. Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you. Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing), but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ, the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to
place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ
may never get another chance to do so
because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and
the life: no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but by me."
(John 14:6)

This means that if you die without
trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever separated from
the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of
eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony
for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by
allowing Jesus Christ to save you today.
Only then will you have true peace in your
life knowing that no matter what happens you
are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ
Ronald L. Grossi

Oh contraire there nad-boi. I go by invitation from your fugly felon boyfriend. (see below for a reminder)

N8WWM spoke out his ass again with this idle threat:

Hey Peepeeholic:
Yes I am in Toledo. I have plenty of down home hospitality for you or ANY of the other queens in here who wish to stir up some mess.
You wanna come by and visit? I will be delighted to send you back to the MISTAKE ON THE LAKE with a thought in your mind that it was a real dumb idea.
Imagine, Peepeeholic...Imagine...You come to my place and star some junk...I put you face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of you laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG. I relish you coming by. I am good in the callbook, just as I told your wife, the trainedpuppet.
Have not had this much fun since I used to go cuttin' coax and building jamming oscillators back when I was 16 yrs old.

Don'cha find it ironic that he threatened to "put me face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of me laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG?

I sure do.

Now quit your fucking sniveling and go lay down by your bowl, sissy.

mopathetic, a wankstain posting forges, hiding behind anonymous servers, and all other sorts of chicken activities as well, femininely meweled the following:

"Any wankstain that says that shit to my face catches a beatin'"

This obviously means that the retard boy beats himself, as he is the leading poster of the very things he cwies the most about.

When will mopathetic say where he will be hiding out, er uh, camping I mean, at the Dayton Hamfest? Most wise bets say he never will.

"Just because YOU don't know how anonymous remailers work, doesn't mean everybody else does, imbecile." Roger Wiseman

"pompousity" Oops! Darn that keyboard, anyway!

"suergery" That is Devry for ya.

"aditting" Darn those typos!

"abckpedals" His greasy hair got in his eyes again

"shreeched" Wasn't he the guy in a sit com? Screech?

"stuid" Pot calling the kettle black?

"heared" That's West Virginia for heard.

"assuslted" Rog just makes em' up as he goes along.

"experieince" Oh, DUH!

"abouve" Is this a French word?

"Cosast" Some place by a body of water?

"mebership", Just a typo, right?

"retqards" Regards or Retards? Who can tell?

"coordinbator" Huh?

"Realy" Really?

"Nitoiced" Keyboard error or stupidity?

"Becasue" Well...

"Licence" Roger had to test twice for his license.

"Convienince"

"Myabe" Or then again, maybe not.

"occurance" Say what?

"srtuggling"

"definatrely"

"delapidated" What a dufus.

"picutre"

"permenatly" Ebonics again?

"Arest" You need a rest, Wogie.

"Sentenceing" No comment.

"Narcotices" What?

"Undre" Is this a city in Germany?

"Surgeoun" And this would be?

"Commuications" Who is laughing at who?

"Ovre" Ovre and out!

"Wondreful" It's a "wondreful" day in the neighborhood?

"Derivitave" Still no spell-checker, eh?

"You lose, shit for brians." Woger showing who real loser is.

"Deisowned" Deis what?

"Deeppest" Roger strikes again.

"Dodgeing". Is he talking about a car?

"Staedy" Steady?

"Linme" Transmission line?

"Getr" Nobody knows.

"Experieince" Wogie is good, ain't he?

"Appropiate" What kind of opiate?

"Laywer" Lay what?

"Visitpors" You never have any, ergo you don't know how to spell it.

"It's "complaintant," you sniveling weasel." (Roger Wiseman on spelling complainant.)

"Irreevant" Good going, Wogie.

"Forwared" Forward HO!

"Glady" Glad Bags?

"Neighborhod" It's a wonderful day in Wogie's neighborhood.

"Mena" Mean? What you mean, Wogie?

"Notr" Not?

"Sassifyed" ALA Rolling Stones.No Sassifaction..

"Fantasises" That is "fantasizes", Wussman.

"Illarate" West BY GOD Virginny!

"Reveresed" Must be one of those off-brand keyboards.

"Soem".as in Some? What a loser.

"VIRIN".What Wogie was before he met the Lavender Lads.

"Minisule".he mussa meant miniscule. Like his IQ.

"Champoin".Whassup, Wiseman? No dictionaries in the mental ward?

"Anoinymous"...a cross between anonymous and annoying?

"Acident" Roger's mom got preggers by accident.

"Alreaedy" Alright, already!

"Amouints" Roger amounts to nothing.

"Aposterphe" This guy is a hoot, ain't he?

"Basios"...word Woger uses when he gets neeeerrrrvous.
"Behing"...a cross between being and behind?

"Coiward" As in peeking from behind his mommy's curtains.
"Feamle"...I think he meant female.
"Losser"...only loser Roger can do it better.
"Ignroant"...typical, considering the source.
"Sluprs"...only Rogie knows what this means.
"Travelled"...a Rogerism, replete with ignorance.
"Postss"...pssst...Roger..that should be Posts.
"Defgenerate"...well, it's Roger's word...
"Faity"...he meant to say Fairy, but you know Roger.

"Ghet" Get a load of Curtain Boy!
"Distribiution"...Roger likes using phonics.
"Biotch"...he meant Bitch, but his phonics took over again.
"Methjadone"...a West Virginia substitute for Heroin.
"Sumbliminal"...one of Roger's favorites.
"Recepticle"...either of Roger's moist cavaties.
"Cociane"...a West Virginia drug of choice?
"Tiome"...Roger meant to say Time...but his fingers were numb.
"Beraking"...no definition. Could mean 'beraking' the leaves,
"Amny"...he meant 'any',
"Nlay"...a town in Maylaysia? Vermont?
"Al;ong"...only Wussman knows what this means.
"Becasu"...well, becasu Roger is not the brightest bulb on the tree.
"Seperation". Why? Because Roger cannot "seperate" from his mommie!
"Sisnce" He meant Since, but his pudgy little fingers slipped off the keys.
"gnetically" What?
"provce" (prove?)
"Piuzza" (West Virginia Pizza)
"Schol" (school?)

"strill" (still?)
"shoitgun" 12 ga or 20 ga?
"Snoip" (How they spell "snip" in Glen Dale)
"Maturbater". Wiseman does it all the time, he just can't spell it.(leaves a sticky residue on his right hand)
"Coskscuking". It's a Roger thing, as in Lavender Lads.
"Waddleing". Only in Glen Dale, eh?
"Spaeaking". Curtain Boy did this after his second retest.

" Stgop" Roger's version of Stop.

"Fahter's" He meant Father's Day.

"fserting"..would that be festering?

"poists". Roger meant "posts".

"snadwich" As in peanut butter and jelly?

"regualr" Glen Dale rendition of "regular".

"aftrer" After? Aftrer what?

"soory". Sorry Roger fucks up again.

"didnb't" He didn't?

"whoile". He ate the whoile thing?

"Woamn" He's hooked on West Virginia phonics, all right.

"prrof" And he kin prove it, too.

"beforfe" Was that before he lurned to spell?

"yoiuy" Roger's version of "y'all".

"illerate" Only illiterate Roger can spell like this.

"haeart" Aw, how heartless of me to laugh!

"valule" Roger has no values. No wonder he can't spell it.

"proch" Doesn't everyone have one on their house?

"inmstitution" Where Roger's mom put him in June 1999.

"timne" It's Howdy Doody time?

"whgo" What? Who dat?

"gnetically" Only Roger knows what this one means.

"crfy" Like, cry, Roger, cry.

"stutrtering" Some stutter, Wiseman stutrters.

"Whjere" Where is Curtain Boy?

"Webiste" That's Website to the rest of us.

"Youire" Your? You're? Who knows.

"fiored" As in fired?

"Parety" Roger gave a party once. Nobody came.

"Bouynce" Bounce?

"Varification" Verifiable mental case.

"Probelms" Poor Rogie.has many problems of the mental sort.

"Partricipate" Oh, DUH!!!!

"Cryed" Gee, Wogie..cry me a river.you dolt!

"Stoick" What a dork. His old 386 has no spell check program.

"Partiall" More WV Phonics, I see.

"Obsucred" Either obscured or Rogie has "sucre" on his mind.

"Infinate" Stupid. Think finite, Rogie.

"Sustinance" As in Sustenance?

"Juvinile". This is the way Roger likes his boys.

"Piut" Put it where, Rogie?

"Toyus". "Toyus R Us?

"Diminuative". Roger's height.

"Definitely" Definitely

"Percriptions" Say what?

"Credibiliy" More Glen Dale intellect.

"Thsoe" Yet another Glen Dale gaffe.

Good F'n luck too the FCC. I'm gonna challange them at Backlash(r) to a no DQ match and the winner takes all, in other words if I win at Backlash(r) the FCC loses ALL CONTROL and ALL FREEBANDERS CAN USE ANY FREQUENCY WE WANT TO from 0 khz to 50 Ghz. If they win (The fcc) then us freebanders will cocede defeat. What about it FCC you up to the No DQ challange at Backlash(r). BTW Vinnie Mac already appoved becuase then if We freedbanders win then he can broadcast the way he wants to without restrictions from stupid useless censors and the goody-two shoes idiots.By the way, ECW ECW ECW ECW ECW ECW ECW ECW ECW

And, since freebanders are EVERYWHERE and out number hams but a thousand

It will keep them busy with a un-ending fox hunt...

FREE!!

For advanced techs and serious radio hobbyists, we're now offering a FREE copy of our previously published "CB EPROM DATA BOOK" by Martin Pickering. (EPROM = Erasable Programmable Read Only Memory.) We sold it for many years but it's now out of print. This little manual of 60 illustrated pages is an absolute GEM of CB technical knowledge you'll just never find anywhere else. And it's yours for FREE from our Web site.

This book reveals the secrets of advanced channel programming, and picks up where our "CB PLL DATA BOOK" (www.cbcintl.com/pllbook.htm) leaves off. You'll get a thorough background in how these amazing programmable chips can be used to modify many popular CB PLL circuits for expanded frequency coverage. Covers the basic programming techniques, and even includes real PC board artwork for making EPROM circuits. Sample artwork includes EPROM boards for the popular MB8719, PLL02A, ï¿½PD2824, and ï¿½PD858 PLL circuits.

Best of all, the price is right--namely, FREE! Download your FREE copy of "THE CB EPROM DATA BOOK" (948 KB Adobe PDF) at:

They got N8WWM already.

If you see the fugly felon doug at Dayton ask him these questions.

(he will be attempting to sell some trash there if I didn't scare him away again)

1. How is the court ordered shrink working out for you?

2. How's the court ordered job hunt going?

3. How's the court ordered wage withholding going?

4. Have you made the rain report for jamming repeaters again, Doug?

5. Have you threatened to kick anyone elses ass, only to have them show up at your section 8 slum and prove what a fucking coward you are, maggot?

Here's what the felon looks like:

How about you figure out a few important things before you "stiff-arm" the guy.
Important question #1--Is the guy running a legal station?
" " #2--Are you using a decent radio to receive the fire frequency?
" " #3--Is your antenna system correctly installed using decent connectors etc?
" " #4--Is there some piece of metal on / near the roof corroded enough to cause Intermod?
These are a good start.
Next problem--the computer speakers etc.--Tuff cookies. If your scanner, telephone, clock radio, stereo, tv audio system, computer speakers & a host of other consumer devices are having a problem with cb energy close by....look in your own house for the problem first before you send the moustaches over to your neighbor. Most times these problems occur due to corroded or improper connector installation, poor shielding of the chassis, poor bypassing of leads entering the device to name a few errors.

In general, I doubt you will get anywhere with the fcc based on consumer device problems.
You might get their attention if the interference is constant on your fire radios.
However, by fire radios I mean bonafide units like Motorola, Icom, Kenwood, MA/COM, Vertex, Harris, Tait etc.
If you are referring to a typical scanner, that, falls back into the realm of consumer devices & the concern is not great there.

Even lowly cb'ers do have some rights.
One of them is that you must make sure your house is in order before you storm the castle in search of Frankenstein's monster.

Good luck.

Pont blank, wrist flipper...where are you gonna be camping at Dayton?

You don't scare anyone, fool. If you can't say where you are you are the one scared.

Come on, wrist flipper...tell us more about how big and bad you are and how yer gonna punch people's lights out, etc. You lying sack of moldy trash. We wanna read more about the big bad wristflipper who goes to people's houses and threatens them with cameras.

Is your doggie is looking pretty well satisfied? In fact, you should take a good look at him every time you come in from the Petro. I bet if you look closely for certain stains, etc. you will figure it allllllll out.

Maybe that web page with the doggie on it is still hanging out there in cyberspace...hmmm?
We know you go look at it everytime you wanna get worked up for a night at Petro.

Come on mopathetic, make some more threats. It has been boring around here lately, you know you are cornered now, and you seek to wiggle away.

There were multiple coordinated busts in several cities last night. Freebanders could be in for some big trouble from Uncle Candy Pants. Tons of equipment seized. Ham radio operators assisted in all raids.

2055. Good morning or good evening depending upon your location. I want to ask you the most important question of your life. Your joy or sorrow for all eternity depends upon your answer. This is the most important question of your life.

The question is: Are you saved?

It is not a question of how good you are,
nor if you are a church member, but are you saved?

Are you sure you will go to Heaven when you die?

The reason some people don't know for sure if they are going to Heaven when they die is because they just don't know.

The good news is that you can know for sure that you are going to Heaven.

The Holy Bible describes Heaven as a beautiful place with no death, sorrow, sickness or pain.

God tells us in the Holy Bible how simple it is to be saved so that we can live forever with Him in Heaven.

"For if you confess with your mouth Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised Him from the dead, you WILL BE SAVED." (Romans 10:9)

Over 2000 years ago God came from Heaven to earth
in the person of Jesus Christ to shed His blood and die on a cross to pay our sin debt in full.

Jesus Christ was born in Israel supernaturally to a virgin Jewish woman named Mary and lived a sinless life for thirty-three years.

At the age of thirty-three Jesus was scourged and had a crown of thorns pressed onto His head then Jesus was crucified.

Three days after Jesus died on a cross and was placed in a grave Jesus rose from the dead as Jesus said would happen before Jesus died.

If someone tells you that they are going to die and then three days later come back to life and it actually happens then this person must be the real deal.

Jesus Christ is the only person that ever lived a perfect sinless life.

This is why Jesus is able to cover our sins(misdeeds)
with His own blood because Jesus is sinless.

The Holy Bible says, "In Him(Jesus) we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins..." (Ephesians 1:7)

If you would like God to forgive you of your past, present and future sins just ask Jesus Christ to be your Lord and Saviour.

It doesn't matter how old you are or how many bad things that you have done in your life including lying and stealing all the way up to murder.

Just pray the prayer below with your mouth and mean it from your heart and God will hear you and save you.

Dear Jesus Christ, I want to be saved so that I can have a home in Heaven with You when I die. I agree with You that I am a sinner. I believe that You love me and want to save me. I believe that You bled and died on the cross to pay the penalty for my sins and that You rose from the dead. Please forgive my sins and come into my heart and be my Lord and Saviour.
Thanks Lord Jesus Christ for forgiving me and saving me through Your merciful grace. Amen.

Welcome to the family of God if you just allowed God to save you.

Now you are a real Christian and you can know for sure that you will live in Heaven forever when this life comes to an end.

As a child of God we are to avoid sin(wrongdoing),
but if you do sin the Holy Bible says, "My dear children, I write this to you so that you will not sin. But if anybody does sin, we have one who speaks to the Father in our defense Jesus Christ,
the Righteous One."

Those of you that have not yet decided to place your trust in the Lord Jesus Christ may never get another chance to do so because you do not know when you will die.

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth and the life:
no one can come to the Father(God)(in Heaven), but
by me." (John 14:6)

This means that if you die without trusting in Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you will be forever
separated from the love of God in a place called Hell.

The Holy Bible descibes Hell as a place of eternal torment, suffering, pain and agony for all those who have rejected Jesus Christ.

The good news is that you can avoid Hell by allowing Jesus Christ to save you today. Only then will you have true peace in your life knowing that no matter what happens you are on your way to Heaven.

Praise the Lord!
Servant of the Lord Jesus Christ

We have to make sure our house is in order and this guy can interfere with what ever right??? It is very apparent as to what he is doing.
One conversation was about causing trouble for others on differnet channels. I have recorded all of the conversations and will forward them to whom ever I need to.

Is it legal for he the boost power? lenears??!! Maybe this is why we are having the problem.

As far as I a concerned he can play all day on the cb just don't bother me with it.

No. But he still has rights to use his CB. Sometimes it's the cheap consumer electronics that are to blame. I'm not saying that's the case for you tho.

Steveo,

We have made him aware of the situation and the guy is not in any hurry to stop using his illegal equipment. DH spoke with a fellow at him job that know alot about cber cause he use to be one. he knew right off the bat what the guy was using before dh could say anything. I know he has the right to use his cb but we have the right not to hear his conversations. The computer speakers are connected to a dell computer so nothing cheap here. :D (I know what you are talking about) :D

TB Parks is another account I have to post to Google groups.

Work with him. Try the frielndly approach first. Maybe he will try to slove the problem. He might be running power, or he might have a legal power radio that is hacked and splattering from over-modulation.

You can thank labor unions for that...and most other "Made in China"

I have to agree. I think the idea of unions was to protect abused workers from low pay and long ours. Since the beginning, the pendulum has swung way in favor of unions. The biggest thing I see is plants closing down in urban areas, and moving to cheaper rural areas. And then from there, just overseas. I would wish they would find a middle ground, where they can both be happy. I am not against unions, but I have seen some friends lose lifetime jobs in plants, where they where making $25 per hour, and the plant closed and moved to NC, and hired workers at $8-10. Now, they can't find any work for unless it's $10-15.

I think I have been both, freebander/ham, all I think I have seen is that the freebanders have more fun.

Also, I think the radio spectrum is for the use of all, there needs to be a good slice of radio spectrum set aside for freebanders, indeed, set aside for "We the People!"

Unfortunately, the hams have just become a self-serving bunch holding much of the spectrum to their hobby... they like nice clear spaces of spectrum where they and a few buddies carry on conversations like old women around a bridge table.

Unless one feels himself a child who needs a parent telling them what they CAN'T do--it is time for a change of thinking here...

I think the FCC needs to support radio use amongst the citizens of this country, not a self-serving group who feel themselves more deserving and special... I think we all need a better form of radio spectrum use--one which conforms to the people, NOT makes the people conform to ridiculous rules...

And, I think a whole lot more... but basically it all revolves around my seeing hams as self-serving/control-freaks who have a good thing going--and are getting away with it...

John

I thought freeband was from 26.000 MHz up to channel 1, 26.965
MHz, and from above channel 40, 27.405 MHz, to the edge of the 10
Meter ham band, 28.000 MHz.

What does that have to do with Ham radio spectrum use?

Quit doing so much thinking, you're going to hurt yourself...

Really? I've never heard that from -any- ham. I know Morse myself and I wouldn't say it takes a musical ear, but then I'm not a ham -or- a musician. So do you have any references to back up your statement that "most hams" feel this way?

<snip>
>50Mhz and above works best with bounce, with enough power

Really? I've never heard that, either. So if I want to talk to someone across town on, say, 2m, I should forget the repeaters, crank up the amp and howl at the moon?

>(and there is >something wrong with the ionosphere these days--holes yanno!) I suppose

The ozone hole(s) might make a difference on 11m if you happen to live in Nome, AK, but I doubt that the mainland US is going to see a big difference anytime soon. As long as skip continues to happen then the ionosphere is still in good shape, and you probably won't have too much luck with CB EME.

But that didn't answer my question: Have you done moon bounce with CB?

By "petty traits" do you mean pointing out the absurdity of the arguments you use to defend your anti-hammie attitude? Guilty as charged.

I really don't care if you get upset or not. Why did you even bring it

As do I. I even consider it a right.

....."logic and the obvious"? Like avoiding sat-comm because of possible alien influence? And working moon bounce on CB? Of course you realize that the moon is a natural satellite complete with alien mud puddles, don't you? Then there is your statement that only musicians can learn Morse code, your anti-government diatribe that came out of nowhere, and your suggestion that education is a bad thing because it will inevitably lead to Hitleresque facism in the US. "Logic and the obvious" indeed.

John, you are a certifiable whacko. Welcome to RRCB!

Thanks John for your comments and that link is excellent. I used to be a "ham" to but I found it to be VERY boring (here anyway) about just a bunch of OLD MEN talking about their poor health issues,"ohhhhh I got a really bad back" "that's nothin' i got double hernia" "i gotcha both beat, I'm actually DEAD" (i wish) Anyway you get my point? I WAS a ham but thankfully not anymore. I find CB AND the freeband to be a MUCH MORE relaxed atmosphere AND MORE FUN. And your are right , WE need less hams to be "sarcastic"? That's not the word I'm looking for as I'm trying to be nice right know, but I think you can understand what I'm getting at.
Thanks and 73's. I like to say 73's rather than just 73. 73 sounds TOOO hammie!

Facts are...

There are millions of CB Radios out there. Some of these radios are in attics, basements and storage sheds--waiting and forgotten.

The hams picture themselves as the source of ALL communications (well, along with gov't) in the event of a major catastrophe. This is quite obliviously ridiculous. It will be truckers and 4-wheelers out on the road, with their radios, in vast numbers, which will first begin to set up communications. They will be providing information and aiding in re-routing traffic around hazardous, dangerous and questionable areas the hams will be monitoring their communications picking up important information as it is happening. CB radios will be supplying hundreds or even thousands (tens-of-thousands, hundreds-of-thousands?) as the few hams with their hobby radios.

Truckers are living in the real world, their radios are used in real world situations--reporting accidents, traffic conditions, emergencies and in conduction commerce--they WILL be the most valuable communication lines--their training has been continuous and ongoing....

Freebanders and CB'ers will shine in the event of such an event--let us all hope it never happens...

But, don't hang your head in shame as the hams would have it; hold it high, you are clearly head-and-shoulders in the defense, protection and communications of this great country!

Hopefully, either the hams have CB equipment--or can quickly modify their equipment and do a quick catch-up!!! <grin>

While debate and argument are good things and will help make it common knowledge that the hams have their heads up their A$$'s--the facts stated above are simply too obivious to argue. However, if/when you do run into hams which cannot face the real world--perhaps it would be a kindness to suggest a three-day observation in their local mental health facility....

Regards,
John

I only wish you were correct. Hams are a tight-knit group which looks down on all other radio-users, with the possible exception of gov't.

Get to know some hams in your area, I think you will find a common "control freak" nature amongst them. If even another ham suggests possible changes to their ancient methods they "black ball" him/her.

Most of all their activities center around a "good ole boys rationale." You have to meet and participate with them to see just how deep this runs...

Get your ham license!!! But, play along with them, make it a mission to study and learn about them... I think you will be back to freeband/"Chicken Band", but you will have a greater appreciation of radio on these bands!

Well Jade,
That's pretty much the drill.
You have no proof that this guy is running anything illegal.
You might keep saying it, but that doesn't make it true.
You have the obligation to ensure your consumer electronics are not at fault.
That means adding whatever filtering is needed on your end.
If adding the proper filtering doesn't fix things, then you might have an issue.
The Fed's already know all about cheap, unfiltered consumer gear.
When you call them, they'll make you aware of it.

Your Dell & speakers are not filtered for this interference.
This goes for your scanner, your toaster and whatever else.

Get your act together and then go after whomever.
Before you can even get someone else involved, they're going to ask if you applied the correct filtering first. If not, they'll advise you to do so and call them back if it doesn't work.

Those are your rights.
Now stop whining & do your part.

Some hams are just as you described, and need to be reminded on occasion that they are, by definition, amateurs. But some hams don't have that holier-than-thou attitude and are quite content belonging to the human race. Lance fits better into the "human" category.

Probably true, assuming the person's interest in radio is narrow enough to fall within the limitations of the CB and/or the freeloader band.

Hey! You aren't one of those hams which needs a three-day observation, are

What limitations do the freebanders suffer (other than danger of being

Why is it that every someone see your antenna or radio the first thing that comes out of their mouths is
IS THAT A CB RADIO, why is that when It might be a Ham radio , stupid public. I guess it was from the days of Smoky and the bandit movies. There should be a movie made for Hams then.
Call it PORKY the FAT ASS HAM radio operator.

Now here is the matter in question, "Whether people should design the radio to fit them--or, if the people should be designed to fit the radio?"

If you look at ham radio it is just un-progressive. If you can't see that--get new glasses!

The world is passing them by and they are becomming a road block to innovation... all for the sport of their hobby...
You are correct, NOT all hams are like this, I personally know of two who are not--and I am one of them... (OK, there are a few more who don't think themselves "radio Gods" and seek to have all non-hams placed in restraints...)

However, I am not here to worship innovative hams anymore than the others... but, the ("others") ones with self-serving nature, and control freak attitude are at need of repair and an attitude adjustment...

Anyway, I think most will agree this needs to be brought out in the light of day and examined and discussed. People need to be aware that a lot of their radio spectrum is being used just to give a chosen few some hobby privilages... in fact, write your congressman about this and complain!!!

And, you don't think there are "bootlegger hams?" Ones with LARGE-multi-kilowatt linears? Ones who chat with citizens of other countries on freqs not allowed by this country? THINK AGAIN!

The hams are like the gays, a few loud voices are controlling laws which affect us all! This is simply un-called for and unnecessary...

Warmest regards,
John

Fact it, they are just as much at the hams throats over antennas and
"comming in over the home stereo."

Just try to run a kilowatt on twenty-meters with a hidden antenna and see how many still come knocking on your door... how do they know???? <grin>

I have a scanner and the noise canceling headphones that I take to the races. It's killer to be able to listen to the driver/spotter/crew chief. I wouldn't go to a live Nascar race without it.

I just saw a closeup of the CB radio they're using in the General Lee car in the new Dukes of Hazzard movie and it's a General Lee radio.Hummmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmmm!!!!!! Wonder if the FCC is going to "confinscate" THAT radio. Isin't it an "export" radio?
Let's see now, FCC takes on the Dukes YEEEEEEHAAAAAAAAA!!!!!!!

>_________________

Ok, let's consider the circuitry in front of the speakers: Assuming the speakers do not have their own power amps, the amps are enclosed in a fully (or almost fully) shielded case. The only unshielded lines into the case are pairs; i.e, only common mode currents can enter the case. Excluding the power line (filtered by the power supply) and the phone line (filtered by the modem transformer), the only means of entry is through the speaker wires connected to a very low impedance power amp. And assuming the power amp uses feedback (and that rectification of the RF occurs at the power amp stage), it would take just as much power to distort the amps' intended output (and therefore cause audio feedback of the demodulated RF) as it would to drive the speakers directly. That also assumes an efficient antenna -- resonant lengths of speaker wire.

Now if the speakers are amplified externally (amp in the speakers), they are more than likely driven by a shielded cable. Regardless, almost all low-level preamps are designed for high common-mode rejection (we're talking 60-90 dB+ at each stage); and since the low impedance of the power amp is no less suseptible to RFI than if the amp was enclosed in the computer case, it would -still- take a considerable amount of RF power on the lines to drive the speakers.

This is not just theory but fact -- they are designed this way for the specific purpose of eliminating that annoying AC hum and digital RFI that permeates most houses, -especially- the horrific noise generated by computer monitors and light dimmers. "Overloaded DAC's"? I don't think so, Bob. How do you overload a DAC? YOU will have to do better than THAT.

They won't send anyone out regardless. They don't care about the CB.
But they do suck up to the ham community, and if it turns out that this guy has a license they may indeed take action if they find he is operating illegally (i.e, using power on the CB).

Actually, they do. If someone is causing interference to a scanner, it's very possible..... nay, -likely-..... that he will also cause interference to an emergency service radio that happens to be in close proximity. This is a problem because while the cops chase the killer with the gun running through the neighborhood, Andy the Amphead keys up and the guy gets away (or worse) because the cops lose comm.

Televisions have always had problems with CB radios because the second harmonic falls right on channel 2. But that second harmonic is supposed to be supressed (filtered) to a point where it's effect is negligible. A stock, unmodified, untweaked radio will usually not cause interference to a TV unless you mount the antenna right next to the set.

The problem is the golden screwdrivers and internet techs who tweak & peak their radios for modulation and/or power without regard to the resulting increase of harmonics. Even if power is kept to the legal limit, the modulation limiter can be modified for overmodulation, and therefore cause a big increase in harmonics. This is why modification of the radio is illegal. And modification of the radio voids your authorization to use it, regardless of the RFI suseptibility of a TV.

Where did that come from? I said nothing about musicians. CCW may be

Then you should probably avoid cell-phones and long-distance carriers, since most of them use satellites. And television is a no-no because most of their feeds come the same route. Disregard weather forcasts based on GEOS photos. In fact, just browsing the net can use a large number of satellites in a short amount of time. But on the flip side, those CIA spy satellites sure don't seem to work worth a damn.....

Hey Moped, I have to delay buying my ham gear. I took the dog to the vet because of ongoing skin allergies. The blood test was $375. That didn't include the steroid spray and office visit. Hopefully, they can determine what the hell he is allegeric to. I didn't have a choice. I have spent a ton of money on this problem already, and figured rather than relieving symtoms, I need to find out the cause and stop it.

I am going to try and hang the Imax this weekend, weather permitting.

I can cure it for $.30 but you can't have the dog back. j/k

I know how that is, Vin, them moochers come before radio toys.

I spent something like $400 in surgery on my last hound, only to have the vet tell me there was nothing he could do but put the dog down...so go in there and say goobye...tears still come to my eyes while I'm typing this..

If a CB radio is legal on wattage out, he doesn't have to clean up that image on any of older TV models. Older TV models are horrific in picking up 'legal transmissions' The TV/computer owner wil need to put some filters inline to take care of the problem if the CB is legal.

I have a SBE Console II that needs a mike. Will a mike from an old JC Penney's radio work on it? I have a multi-meter if that might help me on diagnosing it.

That's about right. I have no kids yet, so this dog and cat are my kids.
Luckily, it's just skin allergies. This total bill came to $431. But I have spent money on this before. I just hope they nail the allergy. I read on the net, that they can be allergic to one of 1,000 things. I think this tests tests for 100 things.

Frank, you'll need to do beter than that.
I've got a stock cobra in my pickup that can do this to telephones from 2 driveways away.
Stop to consider the circuitry in front of the speakers.
A high gain audio amp of dubious quality, connected to a few feet of unshielded wire?
Easily overloaded DAC's on a sound card?
Little or no rf filtering on the hi level outputs / inputs to the sound card?
Cheap, hi gain front ends on a scanner? (My assumption is he uses a scanner)
Gimme a break.

It's the other way around chief.
You make sure the consumer devices are protected first.
Those devices must accept interference from licensed transmitters.
And yes, even cb's are licensed to transmit even though an operator's license is not required.

Which is all well and good but until you've satisfied the feds that your consumer grade stuff is properly filtered, they aren't going to bother sending anyone out to check.

Right after holier than thou, know-it-all's step down from their hi horses & get a grip on reality.

So far, I've not read from Jade anything that remotely suggests he or she has a serious interference complaint involving another radio service. I read
"fire service"
radio and I invited Jade to tell me what he/she considers a fire service radio.
Scanners don't count.

I haven't seen any real proof that the neighbor is running an illegal station.
Jade has not indicated other neighbors are complaining of similar events.
Such complaints might induce me to think the cb'er is running power.

Unless or until someone brings more convincing proof of the allegations, I'm going with the notion it's a singular complaint due the quality of the consumer electronics invloved.

You'll excuse me if I happen to believe in "reasonable doubt" &
"due process" instead of conjecture & unfounded finger pointing.

That's what I was going to say, when is a Dog worth to much to save? I have always figured on the age of the dog, severity of the problem, cost on whether or not put the dog down.

We had a springer that was allergic to half dozen different things.

We started giving her Cortisone Injections, they worked. Took a year or two off her life, but at least she was happier. A lot cheaper too...

You my friend, are an idiot!!!
Most hams feel it takes a "musical ear" to be proficient with morse code--I think a simple mind is best, I struggle with a fast key--only use it for the test--quickly drop it after!!!
50Mhz and above works best with bounce, with enough power (and there is something wrong with the ionosphere these days--holes yanno!) I suppose bounce at 27Mhz is a possibility--however, how many other cb'ers would have a ant pointed at the moon?
Expect no more answers from me--you are not on a level to be given this consideration. You are simply displaying the traits of a control freak, and attempting to use cheap shots to make others answerable to you--I have not the time--be interesting or be silent...
I can clearly see you have the petty traits most hams display--you may be a lost soul... get your license!

You are entitled to your opinions, if you think you will upset me with your rantings--think again... I support free speech.... however, if you have no respect for logic and the obivious it will show and you will be known for such--proceed as you please...

Your own experience would prove otherwise. You asked a lot of questions about your freeband antenna in the amateur.antenna group.

No one put you down or batted an eye over it.

You could have ask the same questions about a "cb" antennas in that group and received the answers that you were looking for.

Get Real?

Whatever John, your just looking for an arguement...

Have a nice day..

Hmmm, actually, that "freeband antenna" is operating on under my ham license on 10 meters... The bandwidth of that ant is too narrow for freeband work...
I use a beacon on Mt. Diablo in the San Joaquin Valley as a signal source for ant testing... it operates 24/7 on Channel 14 on CB... sends the call
"AOH" @ 7 WPM repetitively...
You need to follow the conversations closer... perhaps you do need me to bottom post...

John

Your antenna is licensed?

I plotted your antenna, it easily has a 1 meg bandwidth.

Try bottom posting, you stand a better chance of understanding your Actually the TV series originaly had a realistic(tm) when they filmed it in Georgia then they went to the cobra(tm) when they began filming it in Hollywood. BUT the NEW movie (with Willie Nelson, Burt Reynolds, and Jessica Simpson as Daisy) Does have a General Lee radio in the General Lee car. Go to the warnerbros. site do a search on Dukes CB's it'll show there.

K9 email filter is free. It is an excellent way to deal with spam. And, it supports perl regular expressions. Set up correctly it can deal with 100% of spam--silently deleting it without a bother...
Without it, you cannot use usenet, with a valid email address, without being spammed to death--with it, you don't know the spammers exist...

No doubt about it. I met him at the CiCi's Mexican restaurant in North Olmsted Ohio and bought him supper. He was driving a 57
Chevy, and I was in my 66 Belvedere on a warm summer evening with the top down.

It was kinda slick that he had the stones to drive at least 20 miles and break bread with me.

Why do you think I would even consider doing things back-asswards?
I don't want to scroll though a bunch of chit I have already seen... if you want to, cut and paste the old text at the top!

Very true. Many simply refer to freebanders as out-of-banders or pirates.

I think most freebanders do stay off 10 meters. It seems most illegal intrusions there come from truckers who aren't aware of a hammie band starting at 28 megs (let alone even knowing what freq they are on) and are just flipping two bands "up" on their exports looking for a quiet or private channel.

Common mode shmommen mode.
In a perfect world your model works.
But you're not explaining why I can eat up 2 out of 4 hi end audio cards.
And if you're not cognizent of how you eat a DAC's lunch, go read.
You may also notice that modems don't always use transformers anymore.
Modems are just as susceptible to rf on the lines as anything else.
Sound cards have fairly high imp, non-balanced inputs and hi gain.
Your model assumes no (-) or (+) supply rail changes from rf.
Your model only survives within the puter itself.
```

Add rf on a mic, spkr or phone lead and you have a great receiver.
It doesn't need to overload the main audio amp, just a prior stage.
The xformers you mentioned have enough cap across the windings to pass rf.
The leads you mentioned are not the only ones connected to the puter.
There are monitors, scanners, mice, cameras etc.

> Authorization to transmit with a CB is automatically revoked when the

Not necessary. Just prove that the station is illegal.
It wouldn't hurt to have some decent field strength readings.
Maybe a witness attesting to the actual use of an amp?

Are you trying to present that a "real radios" front end isn't any better than a scanner?

I'm sure the folks paying for those $3000 MA/COM's & Motorolas would love to know about that. Even the Kenwood & Icom users.

You're also back to calling the guy guilty before you have proof.

has anyone had a problem with the magnum 257 dropping down 10 khz when the power is turned on? this happens when the on-off knob is turned to the on position. i thought it maybe an issue with my truck but it happened when wired direct to the battery as well as inside on a power supply. this issue doesn't affect the way the radio talks. works fine when on the supply going into the 5/8 wave ground plane.

thanks in advance

That depends on your definition of "fun".

There is. 40 channels worth. There's also FRS and MURS too.

Are you a ham? If not, then where do you get your stereotypical information?

Ah, another one who can't live under the rules of society.

What do "the citizens" do to deserve such treatment?

Making subjective value judgments is a flaw in your logic. Those "ridiculous" rules are there for a reason. They're not there to ruin your fun, they are there to ensure that all radio users have a fair chance and equal access.

>And, I think a whole lot more... but basically it all revolves around my

Well, lets see, hams do have to pass a test to prove some level of technical proficiency. That is worth a lot more than simply doing - Nothing! Hams earned the right to that "good thing". And it's not an exclusive club either! You are welcome to earn the privilege and join the ranks. The problem is that you want what they have, but don't want to work to earn it. It's no different than a welfare slacker complaining that their hard working neighbor owns a nice house and a BMW, and laments that "they have a good thing and are getting away with it". Yet he somehow feels that he deserves the same considerations while doing nothing to earn it. You probably feel that the rich don't deserve what they have either.

When you work for and earn a privilege (as opposed to crying and whining for it) you tend to respect what it stands for. That is why most hams are more aware of, and tend to follow more closely, the rules of the radio service. Like your first car. If you earned the money to buy your first car by years of paper routes and cutting lawns, you will be more likely to take care of it, than if Dad just gave the car to you.

The problem is that you want the privileges of ham radio, but do not want to work for it. The test is not that difficult. Here is where guys like you then claim that they could easily pass the test, but they don't "want to", and then cite all sorts of "issues" about the politics of ham radio that they find repulsive. Yea, hams don't use roger beeps, noise toys, echo boxes, and they don't normally cuss every other word. It's the difference between a broadway play and WWE smackdown. Not that there's anything wrong with WWE smackdown. But you don't expect those who want to watch a broadway play to have to put up with the antics of the WWE. That's what choice is about.

So now, you want the privileges of ham radio, without earning them, and without the presence of some people who may think and act a little differently than you do. So you want the FCC to kick hams off the ham bands and then turn the service over to a bunch of unlicensed, lawless individuals to turn into the RF equivalent of the wild, wild west? Does that about sum it up for you? Forgetting about the technical issues that would certainly crop up, do you think this is a good plan?

Even if, hypothetically, the FCC were to create a "legal" freeband service from say, 26-28 Mhz, there would still be those who would venture outside of those limits. For those people, it's not about having fun on a radio service, but about the thrill of breaking the law, in much the same way that a 17 year old drinks. There's a certain psychological thrill that comes with "getting away" with breaking the law, or "sticking it to the man". For those who look at societal rules as a personal affront, I can only tell you that you have a long, hard, and uphill battle before you. Happiness will not be easy to find either.

It's not -my- model, and it works in the real world just fine. If it didn't there would be so much noise coming from the speakers that they would be almost useless.

>But you're not explaining why I can eat up 2 out of 4 hi end audio cards.

I have my suspicions.....

>And if you're not cognizent of how you eat a DAC's lunch, go read.

Read what? A DAC datasheet? Heck, I get those as junk mail every month (and I wish they would quit sending them). Maybe you should learn what a DAC actually does before you start spouting off about subjects you know very little about. DAC stands for "Digital to Analog Converter", and the only way to overload them (aside from blowing them up with too much Vcc) is to push all the inputs to the same logic level, in which case you will not get audio from the output but a steady DC signal. So how is it that you think that you can overload a soundcard's DAC with AM (analog) RF and get demodulated audio from the output? If you can then you got some serious voodoo happening.

>You may also notice that modems don't always use transformers anymore.
>Modems are just as susceptible to rf on the lines as anything else.

You might have noticed yourself that the modem is usually a seperate and isolated card, that the line inputs always include RFI protection by law (transformer or chokes), that they have excellent common-mode signal rejection, and that the line impedance is quite low when it's off-hook. Any RF on the phone line stops at the modem for the same reason that I explained about the speakers -- because they are designed to reject environmental RF hash. The only way a stray RF signal can hop the phone line, skip past the modem, infiltrate the power supply and drive the sound card, with a demodulation stage happening somewhere in that path, is if the RF has some significant power.

>Sound cards have fairly high imp, non-balanced inputs and hi gain.

Unbalanced lines use shielded cables.

>Your model assumes no (-) or (+) supply rail changes from rf.

Your criticizm assumes no power supply regulation, no bypass caps on the chips, no capacitance between power traces and the ground plane layer, no inductive losses from the straight traces on the bus, etc. IOW, you are reaching.

>Your model only survives within the puter itself.
>Add rf on a mic, spkr or phone lead and you have a great receiver.

Not even close for the reasons I already explained (and apparently you couldn't understand). Yet I forgot to mention that the only way for the impedance of an RF signal to be low enough to force it's way past the hardware, the line must be both resonant -and- terminate at the computer at a low-impedance node, -and- provide a signal with sufficient strength to defeat the protections and/or output power. That's a pretty tall order for a speaker line -- especially when you realize that most of the time the excess line is wound up and tied, making a pretty good RF choke.

>It doesn't need to overload the main audio amp, just a prior stage.

I didn't say "overload", I said "distort". There is a difference. And while I have no problem with RFI interfering with a stage prior to the output, the most obvious route is the feedback loop which I already addressed. Or weren't you paying attention?

>The xformers you mentioned have enough cap across the windings to pass rf.

No they don't, simply because they either have electrostatic shielding between the layers (somewhat old-fashioned) or use tandem windings on the bobbin (much more common these days, and a whole lot cheaper). But they do have enough -inductance- to choke any RF on the line.

>The leads you mentioned are not the only ones connected to the puter.
>There are monitors,

Shielded.

> scanners,

Shielded, (except for USB, which is a balanced pair).

> mice,

Shielded.

> cameras

USB.

> etc.

Keyboard: Shielded.
Power cable: Filtered.

And you should be aware that the same engineering standards used to prevent RFI from -exiting- the computer case also serve to prevent RFI from -entering- the computer case.

Got any more lame excuses?

How about just setting up a legal CB radio next to the computer and see if it causes the same problems described by the OP? I have done so many times and never experienced a problem. In fact, I have a Tram 60 sitting right beside my computer and use it frequently with no ill effects to the computer, although the computer does tend to cause RFI to the radio.....

A local AM station (KGA, I think) had a problem a few years back. They were pumping so much power that you could hear the audio sounding from the chain-link fence at the nearby school. Are you suggesting that it is the school's responsibilty to filter the fence?

If the harmonic falls on the operating frequency then it doesn't matter how well the front end is built -- interference is the inevitable result. But even the best receivers are not immune to overload.

How about it? Although it has fallen by the wayside during the Bush administration, there is nothing I suggested that would deprive anyone of their Constitutional rights. I'm not a court and I don't execute due process. But if I have good reason to believe that someone is violating a law then I don't keep my mouth shut because of some whacko's ultra-literal interpretation of the Constitution. Due process is not pre-empted by a presumption of innocence -- OTOH, due process must be initiated before it can occur, and reasonable suspicion is enough to begin that process. That's the law. If you don't like it, work to change it. If you don't then quit whining and learn to live with the system the way it is.

You can deny it to your little black heart's content, but the fact remains many cbers get licenses (especialy the no-codes) only to return to the cb and freeband. Some of those who obtained licenses can never go back because their voices are too easily recognized and their hammie "friends" will report their ass for freebanding. They end up being pissed off (then issed upon) hammies.
The anger toward such freebanders can be seen in your own posts. Several years ago you were making posts chastising hammies as being too uptight and uppity and technical who look down on cbers. During your admitted freebanding and illegal operating years, not once will you find a post
by yourself calling others names or expressing nosey concern for other people's business that does not affect you. However, after having your clock cleaned in reec.radio.cb by cbers for your oft extended hypocrisy, you began to take on a different persona. That you attribute such behavior (name calling, attacking those who merely dx or freeband) to
"growing up", illustrates the fact you were an incredible late bloomer
and extremely slow learner who hasn't fully matured yet, as your behavior continued well in to your thirties. In fact, you still are illegal and have no right to say anything to anyone, as for starters, the address you provided the FCC is not your primary residence and the fact that you fail to correct this matter with the FCC even after being informed you are illegal, leaves you no credibility with anything you may say regarding other's actions.

Ain't that the truth. We have an extra class hammie here (Dave Hall Jr., N3CVJ) who talks that un-American smack all the time by attempting to espouse unsolicited claims regading what he views as his education, experience and accomplishments. He actually made the comment that what one posts on the internet regarding illegal actions (the conversation was referring to dx and freebanding) is "the same as a guilty plea in a court of law". With such ignorant arm-chair lawyering from hammies that are supposed to know better, it is little wonder the ranks of hammiedom are in disarray and losing ground each day.

Too old for the fly.

We normally go to this place in Cabo:
http://marina-fiesta.com/

Thinking about go here this year:
http://losbarrileshotel.com/

Cabo's become pretty expensive compared to when we went first started going there 20 years ago.

Fwiw, Due Process (according to the Supreme Court) is a difficult thing to define. It has been said DP is merely the law of the land. The Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments refer only to federal agency protection with regards to DP. DP is basically how and why laws are enforced, and questions "Is the law fair?" as in "does a law presume guilt?" The end result is the law (as it applies to all persons) must be clear and concise and it absolutely MUST have a presumption of innocence to comply with Due Process.

Old news. K4KWH initiated this long before any other hammies thought of it. He was padrooling the interstates long ago for truckers who wander into 10 meters and reporting them to the federal incompetents.
Unlicensed ops shouldn't mess with hammie freqs.

Here's how it went down...Dogie pretty much got himself busted. He was shitting all over himself reading posts on this group by those who actually enjoy the cb hobby and dx and freebanding. He was newly licensed and wrongly felt since the cbers could do what they wanted with the FCC's blessing, he could, too. This is a perfect example of a cber getting a nocode license and being instantly sorry which eventually gave way to anger. His actions and words in this group perfectly mirrored his actions on the hammie bands. He found his chickens came home to roost when his behavior was not only not tolerated, but not permitted. This led to him being popped by the feds for intentional jamming of the Toledo Amateur Club's repeater on several occasions. They had several audio tapes of his illegal broadcasts. In the meantime, he self-appointed himself as internet speech censorer and tried playing radio cop in the group until his psyche deteriorated further.

Hammie radio ops assist in the majority of the busts. Why the hell you think so many hammies get busted in lieu of cbers? I have always maintained the feds are right on concerning this area of enforcement..go after the worst violators..and by virtue of the fed's actions, hammies continue to be their own worst nightmare and enemy.

The law does not distinguish between ignorance and intent. The facts

Are you still using the stock mic? Keep in mind that the stock mic's up/down button is pulsed with with the either the 12V coming up the mic cord or ground, I can't remember off the top of my head. If you have this wire tied to another it may see the turn on as a channel change. when rewiring a mic with no channel change the pin 6 and pin 4 must be disconnected and insulated off.

I can get you more details if you need them.

Here pin out of the mic socket
1- audio
2- Receive
3- Transmit
4- CH up/down
5- Ground
6- 12V from power input with NO CURRENT LIMITING.

Why do 400 million people "need" radio spectrum? What spectrum "needs" are not currently being addressed?

Ham radio is not an exclusive club. ANY one of those "400 million" are welcome to join, provided they agree to follow the rules.

You get the question backwards...
Why do these public servants need most of "MY" radio spectrum, I am against giving the garbage collector more than a couple of chans too...
Hams don't need special treatment, they can share with the rest of the people... giving them those bits of paper with "Licence" written on it just confuses 'em and makes 'em feel "special", if they were all that special, we would spend more and put 'em in "special education classes."
We don't need to design people to fit radios, we need to design radios to fit people--it is easy to see how that got backwards--back when everyone was afraid of electricity and radio had a "mysterious" quality I can see how a bunch of under-educated people set this up--but today things are much different... We need to shake the hams and FCC out of the rut which has been established...

I am telling you, "Write, email, fax or otherwise contact your congressman today!!!"

Most often, even wahat you consider "high end" cards do not have the audio sheild grounded properly. If you are running into problems try running the sheild to case ground or better yet use transformers.

> And if you're not cognizent of how you eat a DAC's lunch, go read.

Prove yourself wrong and go see. There are countless DAC's sitting under big power AM/FM transmitters with much more RF saturation than the common splatter box can produce from a neighbor's house. AND if RF creeps into the front end of a DAC you will NOT hear it (program audio) over the speakers, it will simply raise the error rate and cause the audio to be glitched or muted.

> You may also notice that modems don't always use transformers anymore.

Most do, motherboard integrated ones are starting not to. Which sucks IMHO, if something goes wrong "mother nature" it's new mobo time!

> Modems are just as susceptible to rf on the lines as anything else.

No kidding, but their design dictates that unless their audio output is run to the speakers, audio will not get ino the sound card.

> Sound cards have fairly high imp, non-balanced inputs and hi gain.

If the input is not being used it is shorted to "ground" as stated earlier this is not always a trusty ground, Shorting it to true ground or shutting that input off in the control panel will solve the problem. if one input or output sheild is grounded to a trustworthy ground it will all be good as they share ground with no buffering. If this input is tied to an output device the impedance of the output device is usually low enough to negate problems

> Your model assumes no (-) or (+) supply rail changes from rf.

HEH there are no +/- rails in consumer audio cards, they are single ended. Until you get into the external pro cards you will see this.

> Your model only survives within the puter itself.
> Add rf on a mic, spkr or phone lead and you have a great receiver.

Ground the sheild and the problem will go away.

Tell us about that phone lead and why.

To what?

> There are monitors, scanners, mice, cameras etc.

All not associated with audio, concentrate on the audio card. Hell, my cell phone drives them nuts till they are properly taken care of. one ground and the problem goes away.

Another question to raise is is there even a ground? how old is the house and has the ground rod rotted away, better yet, is there even a ground rod?

I won't try to argue that point as I agree that some people conceivably do "return" (or never left in the first place) to the CB and freeband. I'm still somewhat active on both to this day.

>Some of those who obtained licenses can never go

I'm not so sure that this is as prevalent as you claim.

>pissed off (then issed upon) hammies.

You discount the possibility that while exposed to ham radio, that many people find respect for the rules, and have a change of attitude.

>The anger toward such freebanders can be seen in your own posts.

Despite your many claims, I harbor no "anger". Stating facts that doesn't sit well with you, is not the same thing as "anger".

> Several
>years ago you were making posts chastising hammies as being too uptight
>and uppity and technical who look down on cbers.

Because in many cases, it's true. There are hams who are stuffy and uptight. But they are legal. The converse is also true. Many outlaw CB'ers feel that they have a right to do just what (and where) they please without due regard for the rights of anyone else. RFI, direct interference, and public nuisance issues do not seem to affect them.

Either behavior is reprehensible, and I've defended each respective group when on the receiving end of such stereotypical prejudice. Lately it's the hams who are unfairly on the receiving end of this prejudice.

>During your admitted
>freebanding and illegal operating years, not once will you find a post
>by yourself calling others names or expressing nosey concern for other >people's business that does not affect you.

I still don't. I'm not the one trying desperately to find out personal information (often incorrectly like the name of my wife) about other people.

Also worthy of note is the time you spend reviewing my 10 year span of messages to this newsgroup. One might consider that as bordering on obsession.

> However, after having your
>clock cleaned in reec.radio.cb by cbers for your oft extended hypocrisy,

reec (reek?) a freudian slip?

You are not qualified to make that determination. Your ability to be objective is compromised by your subjective bias.

>behavior (name calling, attacking those who merely dx or freeband) to
>"growing up", illustrates the fact you were an incredible late bloomer
>and extremely slow learner who hasn't fully matured yet, as your

Well, then if I'm still "growing up", then you have yet to start because you are still engaged in that illegal behavior.

If you consider bringing reality into focus in the same manner as a simple unfounded ad-hominem attack, then I can see your issue. But they're not the same.

> In fact, you still are >illegal and have no right to say anything to anyone,

I assume you have some proof of this? Yea I know, you have tons of proof, but you're not about to post it.

> as for starters, the address you provided the FCC is not your primary residence and the >fact that you fail to correct this matter with the FCC even after being >informed you are illegal, leaves you no credibility with anything you >may say regarding other's actions.

You really, REALLY need to go back to whatever source of information gathering you use and either fire them, demand your money back, or something. Because, quite frankly, you are embarrassing yourself every time you make these erroneous claims. My listed address in the FCC database is exactly my primary (only) residence. I am doing nothing illegal.

So the real question is, Who do you think I really am (today)? What do you think is my "real" address?

The only thing I can figure is that the commonality of my name (Next after Smith and Jones), has you so confused, that you believe I'm someone different than who I actually am (There are 3 Dave Hall's in my company's phone directory, talk about confusion). The fact that my phone number is unlisted removes me from many people searches. That also explains why you keep insisting that my wife's name is "Kimberly T. Hall", and that she's a "teacher". In conclusion, you continue to trust unreliable sources which provide you erroneous information and then accuse others of things which are incorrect. It is not my credibility that is in question here, it's yours.

But wait? Wasn't it you who just accused ME of trying to obtain people's personal information? And you call me hypocritical. Sheesh.......

His 160M ant looks like a giant spider made out of heliarced aluminum

Among his equipment is one 50,000 watt Collins transmitter... it is simply

Yes, K9 is the best solution to my personal spam problems, which I have found. I was sure it would benefit others.
It really becomes powerful if you drop the pcre.dll into the k9 directory--then it can do perl regular expressions through the white and black list.... Then filtering for words like "v.i.a.g.r.a", v_i_@_g_r_@, "P e n | s", etc... becomes easy and VERY effective! There is even a test option in the K9 app where you can test your reg expression before implementing it...

I wonder if God will punish them? Or, only the ones attempting to keep 10 meters as it is?
And, I am puzzled just how to rate this "crime" on a one-to-ten scale--against, murder, rape, child molestation, grand theft, and spitting on the sidewalk...

You almost gave me a heart-attack. My friend owns and operates the local shack, and it's a flagship store. I thought you were going to say the chain was in liquidation or something!

I will miss the old Radio Shack name fore sure, i have great childhood associations with theoutlet. ah well, life goes on and so do the radiowaves

This is not just Canada. A friend of mine in middle management for a region has told me that within a few years there will only be one RS store per major metro area, maybe two for big areas with lots of suburbs like Boston, Chicago, NYC, LA, but those will be the exceptions. 1 store in Minneapolis, 1 in Richmond VA, 1 in Miami, etc.

They will be doing most of their stuff through the web and by phone.

Frankly who cares anymore, they carry so little, try to get a good resister or diode and you are SOL.

Idiot!

More than 900 Canadian electronics stores to become
THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY

Richmond, Va. and Barrie, ON, April 27, 2005 - Circuit City Stores, Inc. and InterTAN Canada Ltd. today announced that on or before June 30, 2005, all stores currently operated by InterTAN Canada Ltd. under license from RadioShack Corporation will be re-branded as THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY. The introduction of THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY stores begins today with the unveiling of the Toronto Eaton Centre location.

"Ninety percent of all Canadians live within a 10-minute drive to one of our locations. By June 30, THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY will have the same national coverage," said Brian Levy, president and chief executive officer of InterTAN Canada Ltd. "Customers will continue to see quality, national and international electronics brands as well as an emphasis on personal and portable devices."

THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY will be the local destination for personal electronics such as MP3 players, digital cameras, LCD TVs and a broad selection of personal and portable consumer electronics. THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY will also offer a diverse mix of communication, computer and household electronic products.

The Eaton Centre store in Toronto is the first location to be re-branded THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY and will be followed by other locations in the Greater Toronto Area and other major markets. The introduction of THE SOURCE BY CIRCUIT CITY will be supported by a major advertising campaign featuring television and radio commercials as well as print and outdoor advertising.

Thanks to Canadia's truth-in-advertising laws,
it will be renamed Radio Shit.

They dropped their catalog, and their website stinks. That's two for two. If you can't find it on their website and don't have a catalog to do phone orders from they might as well lock the doors now.

There is no loss whatsoever if RS just up and disappeared. This seemed evident when they dropped their catalog, and started selling cellphones as their main items.

Radio Shack canada stores (Intertan) still have a catalog... and they still

Radio Shack Canada (sorry, The Source now) is a little more true to their roots than the USA Radio Shack.

Example, compare these two searches at their respective sites:

HelloChad and thanks for the reply.
I thought of the mic, too. I tried a radio shack mic from a HTX-10, which used the same type mic with up and down buttons. I also wired a road king mic which has no up/down buttons, but still had the same problem. I also e mailed a couple of shops but everybody said they had never heard of this issue before. Its kind of strange because it in now way affects the performance of the radio. A few years ago I had another 257 that had the orange display and never had this issue. Other than that it's not a bad little radio for what it is (price range). It picks up a little more noise than some of the Galaxy/Connex type radios but I figured it was a compromise I could live with because of the smaller size.

CalAmp is a leading provider of comprehensive breakthrough communications access and content delivery solutions, services, and products.

We have an exciting opportunity for an experienced Antenna Engineer in Oxnard, CA.

Description:
The ideal candidate will possess a wide range of antenna engineering capabilities ranging from high-level research and development to full product development. The successful candidate must be able to create innovative solutions for ultra high volume and ultra low cost products, as well as have an open mind for new fields and designs. This person will work with minimal guidance and support

Essential Qualifications:

• Design of millimeter wave (Ku, K, Ka) antennas and components such as horn antennas (corrugated and non), reflector antennas, patch antennas (microstrip), OMT's, polarizers, waveguide hybrids and couplers.
• Intimate knowledge of simulation tools, such as HFSS, TICRA, and ensemble.
• Hands on capability of building, testing and fine tuning antennas during prototype and early production stages.
• Must be proficient in measuring techniques such as Far-Field, near field ranges, using lab test equipment such as spectrum and network analyzers.
• Experience in interacting with mechanical engineers, technicians, and production personnel during the full product life cycle.

Frequency Range Experience:

• Ku band
• K Band
• K (10-15GHz, 17-26.5GHz, 30GHz)
• L band (1.5GHz)
• 2.4GHz
• 5.8GHz

Please submit your resume to mailto:resumes@calamp.com
Please use reference code: 25000633 - ANTENG in the subject line.

Equal employment opportunity is basic to our hiring and employment philosophy. Our company believes work results are what count, regardless of race, color, religion, age, sex, national origin, or disability. The company seeks to give all qualified veterans of military service full consideration for employment.

It most certainly does. It's the difference between premeditated murder and negligent manslaughter. Although homocide has nothing to do with the FCC, the commission usually sends a warning to an alleged violator prior to issuing an NAL. If the warning is ignored then the subsequent NAL is prosecuted as a violation that was done both willingly and -intentionally-.

> The facts >are that there ARE illegal intruders on 10 meters. The how's and why's

Intent is -very- relevant because some of those dopes don't know that they are operating illegally. And many of those that -do- know they are illegal are not aware of the severity of the consequences if they get caught. Hence the FCC's pre-NAL warning letter to notify them that such operation is illegal and subject to heavy penalties, giving them the opportunity to rectify their ignorance before they get popped for several thousand dollars.

As usual, Dave, you are clueless.

I think the disagreement is with how "presumed innocent" is applied.
The phrase simply means that the accused must be aquitted unless guilt can be proven. It does not prohibit any presumption of guilt by the accuser, the victim, the press, the public, or anyone else except the judge/jury; i.e, presumption of innocence applies only to those that are charged with making the -determination- of guilt or innocence.

Now as for "due process".....

According to the 1855 Supreme Court opinion to which you referred,
"due process of law" applies to any law that is (1) not otherwise unconstitutional, and (2) consistent with "those settled usages and modes of proceeding existing in the common and statute law..."

For an example of the first condition, Bush's Patriot Act is a direct violation of "due process of law" because it infringes on the right to a fair and speedy trial, the right to contest all accusatory evidence, the right to an attorney, presumption of innocence, etc, etc..... it's a quite a long list. Therefore, the Act is unconstitutional under the Fifth Amendment because it's unconstitutional in other respects. It's kind of a double-whammy.

As for the second condition, Bush's Patriot Act is a voyage into uncharted legal waters. He fabricated new laws that have no foundation in common or statutory law. And while the Act itself is statutory, most of its laws are unprecedented; i.e, they are not derived from "settled usages and modes of proceeding". Bush's Patriot Act is, once again, in violation of the Fifth Amendment because it contains laws that are not based on any legal precedent.

In fact, the passing of the Act by Congress was itself a violation of the Fifth Amdendment because it was done in direct contradiction to the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Amendment: "It is manifest that it was not left to the legislative power to enact any process which might be devised. The article is a restraint on the legislative as well as on the executive and judicial powers of the government, and cannot be so construed as to leave Congress free to make any process
'due process of law,' by its mere will."

Ok, that was way off topic, but you get the drift.

Very good point. Some cards have shield connectors that are DC isolated from the chassis to prevent ground loops with other audio equipment. In such cards the shield is coupled to chassis ground with caps, but line noise can be a problem (and the cap must be shorted) because the caps may not large enough to fully shunt low frequencies.
But the caps do shunt RF very well, and if they can keep the local AM broadcast stations out of the soundcard then the neighbor's legal CB radio shouldn't be a problem.

Ah, another one who attempts to justify breaking the law by down playing the relative importance of it.

It's an indication of a person's moral compass, by what point they consider a law to be "trivial" enough to ignore.

By your logic, we should probably draw a line through all crimes below the "violent" level, since they are "no big deal" in the grand scheme of things. Then once those crimes have been ignored, we can then reclassify all violent crimes as well, and the slippery slope begins..... It's not such a leap for an ultra liberal ACLU- type lawyer to interpret the prosecution of someone's criminal actions as an infringement of some perceived "right".

Ignorance of the law is no excuse. At least it didn't used to be. With all the liberals running around looking to paint every lawbreaker as a victim, I guess ignorance might be a legitimate excuse now.

Since you saw fit to bring violent crimes into the picture in the beginning, I'll refer back to them when I make the point that someone claiming that he didn't know the gun was loaded, would hardly be absolved of the crime of killing someone based on that excuse alone.

Do you get a warning when you get pulled over for speeding? Sometimes you do, sometimes not. Do you get a warning when you rob a bank? Rape someone? Assault? Do you get a chance to claim ignorance and promise that you won't do it again?

It's true that the FCC usually sends out warning notices first, but they don't have to. That's called discretion (the better part of valor).

I see it a little differently: When we the people are subject to mountains of laws that can be fully understood only by an army of lawyers, ignorance can be a very reasonable excuse in many cases. It's simply impractical (and nearly impossible) for the average citizen to know and understand all the laws that apply to every circumstance.

It has happened. But even when it didn't, the lack of intent has certainly been a factor in determining the punishment.

There is a defense known as 'justifiable homocide'. I understand that it's rarely used, but it has been a successful defense in some cases.

>It's true that the FCC usually sends out warning notices first, but >they don't have to. That's called discretion (the better part of Actually, they do need to send out those notices in almost all cases.

The reason behind it is the FCC's pseudo-constitutional system of law enforcement and the need to establish "willful and malicious" conduct of the violator. This bypasses the criminal court system, forwards the forfeiture order directly to the DOJ for collection, and pre-empts evasion of payment if the violator files for bankruptcy -- an NAL is a debt that cannot be discharged under any chapter of bankruptcy law. If the debt -was- dischargeable then the FCC would be forced to file an adversarial complaint and subsequently defend their law enforcement practices in Federal court, which is something they have no intention of doing because they would lose.

I have one too and love it, compact, cheap, stellar SSB performance!

If it is a new blue one try calling RF Limited and see what's up, hell, it may still be under warranty.

Good luck, But I have had excellent results from RF Limited's customer service.

Problem is that they don't do all that well with AM Broadcast. When I was a conglomo radio engineer we had a 50K FM and a 500W AM in a residential area. I would get complaints-o-plenty of the AM coming thru computer speakers, cheapo HT systems and phones. Of course we had to do what we could to eliminate the problem and usually I would pull the sound card, DC ground it with 1 ohm 1/4W resistors and the problem went away. 90% of my problems called in were ratified with proper grounding. Fortunately most of the construction in the area is newer as that tower used to be outside city limits but due to urban sprawl it is no longer.

As for my personal soundcards I use pro models with a separate breakout box that's balanced. The other card in that computer and other computers in the house are SB audigy models with the mini jacks removed and XLR whips out in their place. This whip then goes to a breakout box with 6 Jensen transformers in it 4 for output and 2 for input. The mic input is shorted down permanently. I have zero noise problems, if you have an Audigy card it does sound good! You just have to help it out :)

The transformers..... When radio engineering and upgrading EAS systems in all the stations I found that all the old receivers that we were throwing out were loaded with Jensen transformers! What a salvage find!!!!! I had many-o-dumpster diving missions, then adopted a Chad's gotta pilfer it pile. Lots of transformers and power supplies were gutted :)

Hey Peepeeholic:
Yes I am in Toledo. I have plenty of down home hospitality for you or ANY of the other queens in here who wish to stir up some mess.
You wanna come by and visit? I will be delighted to send you back to the MISTAKE ON THE LAKE with a thought in your mind that it was a real dumb idea.
Imagine, Peepeeholic...Imagine...You come to my place and star some junk...I put you face down and hurtin extreme, take pics of you laying there with a bumped up noggin, and post 'em to the NG. I relish you coming by. I am good in the callbook, just as I told your wife, the trainedpuppet.
Have not had this much fun since I used to go cuttin' coax and building jamming oscillators back when I was 16 yrs old.

Yea,,those freqs are good, too.

(Unfortunately, the hams have just become a self-serving bunch holding

>Are you a ham?

Irrelevant. One needs not be a football player to note correct

Perhaps the technique you claim to employ flawlessly to arrive at such they CAN'T do--it is time for a change of thinking here...)

>Ah, another one who can't live under the rules

It's not a coincidence those whose views with which you disagree are always referred by yourself as one who can not conform or love by the rules of society. It's always the other person, never you, that has problems with society, despite -your- position always being the minority.

Taking into consideration your comments concerning cbers as federal criminals, and that because one merely SPEAKS (or in this case, posts) of talking dx, it somehow constitutes and equals the same as a guilty plea in a court of law, and it has never been more crystal clear that not only do you not have a clue concerning how the laws work, but you clearly do not share the mindset of the majority, or in this case, as you say "society".

>What do "the citizens" do to deserve such >treatment?

"Deserve" has nothing to do with it. Life isn't always fair and people don't always get what they deserve. In fact, your bellowings above reiterate your pompous and arrogant position that hammies are somehow more "deserving" simply by virtue of their sending a few bucks in to get a license. Newsflash: you are no more "deserving" of the right to transmit than a cber.

(I think we all need a better form of radio spectrum use--one which conforms to the people, NOT makes the people conform to ridiculous rules...)

>Making subjective value judgments is a flaw in

LOL...yet, all those subjective judgements you make of others based on nothing more than your mistaken perception and interpretation of self-taught empirical observations, is not, somehow.

Tell us the reason for the dx rule relating to cb.

>They're not there to ruin your fun, they are

Your claim that ALL radio users have a fair chance is not valid. Think about it a few weeks and you may realize why.

(And, I think a whole lot more... but basically it all revolves around my seeing hams as self-serving/control-freaks who have a good thing going--and are getting away with it...

>Well, lets see, hams do have to pass a test to

What level of technical competence is gained by obtaining the nocode license?

>That is worth a lot more than simply doing -

>Nothing! Hams earned the right to that "good >thing".

You are assuming everyone shares your opinion that getting a hammie license is something earned, like an accomplishment. For children or the learning impaired, this may be true. For the (ahem), majority of citizens, it is no accomplishment. Getting a driver's license takes more studying. Most people do not feel obtaining a driver's license is any major accomplishment (again, this makes exceptions for children, the infirm or handicaps, or the learning impaired, foreigners, etc.) and is simply another manner of paying a governmental fee for a privilege.

> And it's not an exclusive club either!

Make up your mind..you first cite how this group "earned" something by the simple process of paying a fee, whcih you claim makes one "entitled" to benefits others are not, then you claim obtaining a license makes one technically competent. If such were true (it isn't), all who held a license would be "technically competent", equaling, by default, an "exclusive" group (those licensed AND competent). Neither is true.

>You are welcome to earn the privilege and join >the ranks. The problem is that you want what >they have, but don't want to work to earn it.

Most here recognized your problem for what it is. It is you that wants what many of us have,,the ability to do both (cb, dx, and hammie-play), only you screwed up your chance so now you cry about other's actions concerning what you can no longer get away with..

>It's no different than a welfare slacker

>complaining that their hard working neighbor

>owns a nice house and a BMW, and laments >that "they have a good thing and are getting >away with it".

Perfect analogy. When it was you that was on that welfare only a few short years ago, it most certianly was different, as you have spent much time trying to explain away why it is acceptable for you to participate in such behavior when you saw fit, but no one else.

> Yet he somehow feels that he deserves the >same considerations while doing nothing to >earn it.

You are projecting your own personal feelings. That you felt that way during your illegal operations doesn't mean anyone else shares your position. In fact, as has been demonstrated time and time again, no one shares your position concerning this.

> You probably feel that the rich don't deserve

>.what they have either.

Again, what one deserves is irrelevant...try and remain focused and not allow your hammie-induced dementia to cloud your already skewered "subjective" judgements that you blame on others.

>When you work for and earn a privilege (as >opposed to crying and whining for it) you tend >to respect what it stands for.

Here we go with your Rodey Dangerfield dilemma. You get no respect because you have demonstrated you "deserve" none. Your licensure status means shit, regarding respect. This is part of your problem that governs your actions and bizarre behavior among these pages. You hilariously cling to this mythical idea you conjured that you somehow are deserving of respect because you have a license. You're not.

>That is why most hams are more aware of,

>and tend to follow more closely, the rules of

"Most hams"? Certainly you arn't invoking more of this "subjective logic" you claim illegitimizes any point you are attempting.

But of course, More of your self-projection. Some of us comprehend value and the origination of the item is irrelevant. In fact, just the opposite is often true. If your mother gave you a car, would you not be MORE apt to take care of it? Other's don't often share your personal projections, Davie, you are a minority with your freaked up beliefs. Many would be more apt to take care of something a parent gave, not less.

>The problem is that you want the privileges of guilty plea in a court of law, and now hammie radio equals a broadway play. Your linkage needs adjusted, again.

that way, though, and the problem is manifested in your..complaints concerning such.

>So now, you want the privileges of ham radio,

More subjective logic from you...those privileges are already there for many of us. Just because you never learned how to competently enjoy both worlds, you mistakenly feel others are as ignorant as yourself.

If that were true, export radios that covered those freqs wouldn't be a export radios are blamed for the majority of the intrusions of which you speak.

I agree, the law was never intended to be so complicated that only a legal expert can comprehend all the nuances of it. I tend to believe that lawyers do this deliberately to justify and continue their existence.

Even worse is when a seemingly cut and dry law get's "what-if'd" to death in a courtroom battle of hypotheticals which may never occur.

This is why you are required to sign dozens of forms for what should be a simple transaction in many cases.

Sure it has happened. When someone desperately wants to escape for responsibility, they (and by proxy, their lawyer) will do and try anything to get them off. The absurdity of such defense tactics, just makes me shake my head.

> But even when it didn't, the lack of intent has >certainly been a factor in determining the punishment.

Well sure, killing someone completely by accident is a far different thing than deliberately murdering someone.

But what I was talking about, but probably didn't use the best example in doing so, is that you can't kill someone in cold blood and then claim that you didn't know it was wrong or illegal, and expect much leniency.

The same thing applies to radio operation to some degree. The claim that you didn't know you were running on an illegal frequency may not hold much water, since the FCC requires that you read and understand the rules before operating, and by the act of your operation, they assume that you know the rules. It's sort of the same language they use for software licenses. "By installing this product, you agree to the terms of the license" etc.

I hate to bring this up, since I can't "prove it", but I once read an account in a CB magazine (It may have been S9's Washington Outlook), back in the day, which covered FCC busts of illegal CB'ers. This one bust involved a group of SSB'ers who had formed a club on a freeband channel. One of the guys who was busted made a claim that he didn't know he was operating illegally, since the radio he was using had been purchased by another person, who had (unbeknownst to him allegedly) swapped a standard channel crystal (it was a 23 channel rig) for one which would produce an illegal channel. The operator further claimed that he assumed he was operating on channel 23 (or whatever it actually was, I don't remember), as that is what his channel selector showed. The FCC didn't buy his story, based on other evidence that indicated that he was all too aware of what was going on.

Yes, there is a "justifiable homicide" defense. Usually this works best in abusive domestic situations, where severe emotional and physical abuse leads to violence as the only solution. By definition, self defense is also considered a justifiable homicide.

But justifiable homicide is not the same thing as claiming ignorance of the existence of homicide law.

This is interesting. The FCC has in the past taken certain violators to criminal court. In the vast majority of cases though, you are correct. There would seem to be some threshold which determines their course of action.

What I am especially curious about is your assertion that if the FCC took a clear violator to federal court that they would lose. Why do you feel that way? I would presume that once the FCC decided to act upon a violator that they would have enough evidence to prove their case.

You can deny it to your little black heart's content, but the fact remains many cbers get licenses (especialy the no-codes) only to return to the cb and freeband.

>I won't try to argue that point as I agree that >some people conceivably do "return" (or never

So, you began breaking the law again by returning to the freeband after you told the group you no longer do so because you "grew up" and are setting responsible behavior patterns for your daughter by folllowing the law.

Some of those who obtained licenses can never go back because their voices are too easily recognized and their hammie "friends" will report their ass for freebanding.

>I'm not so sure that this is as prevalent as you >claim.

That's cool...but entertain, for a moment, if you would, the notion you are subscribing. If you do not believe me, then you mistakenly believe the FCC is actively patrolling the air for violators. This info can be found simply by extolling a little leg work.....but I'm telling you, the FCC does NOT actively patrol the air seeking violations by hammies or cbers.

 They end up being
pissed off (then issed upon) hammies.

>You discount the possibility that while exposed
>to ham radio, that many people find respect

>for the rules, and have a change of attitude.

I didn't discount it at all, as I know what you say to be true, but what I say is just as true. Members belong to both camps.

_
The anger toward such freebanders can be seen in your own posts.

>Despite your many claims, I harbor no "anger".
>Stating facts that doesn't sit well with you, is >not the same thing as "anger".

Stating facts has you chasing your tail with semantics. You call people criminals with nothing more than your mistaken ignorance that "saying it on usenet is the same as a guilty plea in a court of law". Although you have been given the correct information regarding the judicial system, you continue to mistakenly believe you may publicly refer to one as a criminal even if they were not convicted in a court of law. THIS, is fact.

Several
years ago you were making posts chastising hammies as being too uptight and uppity and technical who look down on cbers.

>Because in many cases, it's true.

Not "in many cases"..you stated "For the most part" in your post when you referred to the hammies... using the same sterotyping you just hypocritically took another to task for employing. .

>There are hams who are stuffy and uptight.

>But they are legal. The converse is also true.

>Many outlaw CB'ers feel that they have a right

>to do just what (and where) they please

>without due regard for the rights of anyone

Same is true with many hammies, yet for some reason, you do not voice your concern for those you hold in higher regards, higher esteem,,,you know,,those who are supposed to lead by example. In other words, you shit all over the hammie creed.

> RFI, direct interference, and public nuisance

Yet, you continue to employ it yourself.

>Lately it's the hams who are unfairly on the

Why is it unfair to illustrate the same behavior committed by hammies that you complain about when committed by cbers?

_
During your admitted
freebanding and illegal operating years, not once will you find a post
by yourself calling others names or expressing nosey concern for other people's business that does not affect you.

>I still don't. I'm not the one trying desperately >to find out personal information (often >incorrectly like the name of my wife) about

Yes, you were. In fact, you initiated the personal info game with me and everyone knows it. You were told long ago to stay out of the personal, off-topic arena. Once you violate this, you have nothing to say when your initiated behavior is returned.

>Also worthy of note is the time you spend >reviewing my 10 year span of messages to

One might, but I have a photographic memory. There,, now there's another little tidbit of information for you to wallow in. I remember just about everything, and in most cases you refer, I merely have to type in the pertinent key words of your past posts and voila!....no time at all spent other than three clicks right to the passage needed to illustrate your incorrectness, hypocrisy, and double-talk, and lies.

However, after having your
clock cleaned in reec.radio.cb by cbers for your oft extended hypocrisy,

>reec (reek?) a freudian slip?

Which speaks volumes of how you think.

>You are not qualified to make that

Yet, based on your unsolicited self-qualifications regarding psychology, you somehow present yourself as qualified to determine whether others are qualified for anything.

That you attribute such behavior (name calling, attacking those who merely dx or freeband) to "growing up", illustrates the fact you were an incredible late bloomer and extremely slow learner who hasn't fully matured yet, as your behavior continued well in to your thirties.

>Well, then if I'm still "growing up", then you >have yet to start because you are still >engaged in that illegal behavior.

As are you, according to your statement above at the beginning of this post.

>If you consider bringing reality into focus in the >same manner as a simple unfounded

>ad-hominem attack, then I can see your issue.

Reality is you are not permitted to refer one a criinal based on nothing more than your ignorance regarding the laws of the land, yet, this somehow presents a great inner difficult struggle for you, regarding the comprehension of such a simple concept that is solidified by law. In fact, you still are illegal and have no right to say anything to anyone,

>I assume you have some proof of this? Yea I >know, you have tons of proof, but you're not

>about to post it.

No Dave, that isn't the standard reply, but I'll remind you since you strugge with memory impairment. You initiated unsolicited claims,,many of them. When challenged for proof, you declined for personal reasons. You are still free to provide proof for any of your unasnwered claims, and then, as proper decorum and communicative technique dictates, will have your inquiries answered with proof in turn. You continue to struggle with such simple techniques of proper communication, but it does illustrate perfectly what i have always maintained,,,that some of those licensed for communications, know the lease about it.

  as for starters, the address you provided the FCC is not your primary residence and the fact that you fail to correct this matter with the FCC even after being informed you are illegal, leaves you no credibility with anything you may say regarding other's actions.

Agreed. Perhaps you can explain how you mistakenly feel your unsolicited but invoked claim regarding a company directory relates to anything, but then again, keeping with your continued behavior that when you are not aware of something, it must not exist, speaks volumes.

You do not need to be convicted of an action to make the reality of that action known. You continue to fall back on the flawed concept that you're only guilty when caught and convicted. As if you really are not breaking the law because the feds never witnessed you doing it. That's as absurd as the philosophical question of whether a tree

freeband?

Because as a matter of percentage, the number of law breaking hams compared to licensed users, is much smaller than the amount of illegal operators compared to legal CB'ers.

Everyone on the freeband is illegal. You don't need fancy equipment to figure it out. Mere presence of a station there is all that is needed to make the very accurate empirical observation.

On the other hand, a ham running twice the power output on 75 meters would not be readily apparent to someone listening as the signal would only be 3db stronger.

Yes, but you weren't around here when those beginning posts were first

Besides, that "photographic memory" of yours is flawed, otherwise you

It's an example of just how common my name is.

It's the ultimate irony for someone like you, who craves anonymity.
You go to great pains to hide who you are, while I gladly reveal my Bad behavior is inexcusable regardless of who started it. When you you BOTH got suspended. Both are equally culpable.

Using the excuse; "Well, he started it!" is truly feeble and a poor

This is just my $0.02, but you might also want to consider using Netscape as your mail client.

Netscape 7.2 comes with the spam filter already installed. It sounds very similar to the K9 filter, is incredibly easy to use, and is very effective. When you start, you just mark anything that you consider span with a single mouse click. Over time, Netscape uses the information in the marked messages to create a very effective filter. You still have the option of creating your own filters to steer messages into special folders.

One or two pieces of spam will get by, from time to time, but a click of the mouse and you never see it again. The filtering of those special words, like you listed, is automatic. No need to deal with, ugh, regular expressions.

There is a Beta version of Netscape 8.0 out right now, but I will wait a little longer. For users of Internet Explorer, Netscape offers a free popup blocker. It installs in minutes and is also very effective. A popup blocker is standard with Netscape 7.2.

He reminds me of an old woman with nothing better to do than harass anyone in disagreement with them.

However, when not here, he is most likely in his mobile, pursuing truckers (complete with a rotating caution light on his trunk and wearing a bunch of pseudo-official badges, patches and ball caps purchased at ham fests), I suppose it is better to have him here than out annoying the truckers, at least they can get some honest work done then! <grin>

Yes, there are other filters and methods. However, if a person is knowledgeable in the use of regular expressions, there is just no comparison to the power of K9 with Netscapes basic capabilities... regular expressions are just not that difficult to pick up... K9 has other capabilities beyond the basic supplied by Netscape also...

I use the Extigy -- it's great because you can locate the box some distance away from the noisy computer and ground it directly to the mixer.

But for complaints to the station, I got them to order a huge box of 4" jumpers that have pigtails to the shield. Just plug them into the soundcard (or whatever audio equipment is getting the interference), screw the pigtail to the chassis, and 'presto' -- problem solved. No invasive surgery, and you're out of the house in a matter of minutes.

Those old Bogen and Rauland paging amps have some pretty sweet transformers, too. One of these days we gotta exchange inventory lists of our scrounge bins.

Maybe a few think that way, but I think it's mostly to protect against the ambulance-chasing opportunists that force court interpretation of every little flaw, as you stated with the following:

It's not a matter of taking someone to court on criminal charges, it's about the NAL system of enforcement. The evidence may be overwhelming and uncontested, but the procedure is probably unconstitutional as the Supreme Court has suggested in at least one opinion. So the FCC avoids any constitutional challenge to the NAL, even to the point of settling before it goes to court. You suggested that there is some threshold they use to decide which actions to take, and I would suggest that you are right -- a critera based on the willingness and resourcefulness of the accused to mount a legal challenge against the FCC's NAL system.

Hey Lance, do you have any experience with tri-band HT's?

The Yaesu VX-5R specifically?

I've just temp installed a cb in my truck and can't hear anything except for some guy who says he's in Puerto Rico. Needless to say, I haven't had a cb hooked up before. The only way I can hear that guy is if I turn up the squelch. Is there a FAQ where I can get some answers or can I ask on here?

Go try reverse-psychology on the lesser minds... or, even on those willing to jump your hoops...

Don't you get enough people who don't like you in the real world--yanno, you might fool them here--if you were but a tad bit brighter....

Either you lacked attention as a child and even negative attention is valued by you--or, else you could have been a spoiled child, and now try in vain to restore unwarranted attention--even to the point of accepting it being paid in the negative sense...

Your mind, tactics, methods and actions are very childlike--of course, you are either unable or unwilling to be able to face that. You may very well be fooling yourself--I don't think you are very successful with others...

While you think others are looking at what your mind sees, and you are running the show--what is really occuring is that others are given a demonstration of how small a man you are (well, unless you are a woman who hasn't completed her sex change yet!)

WAKE UP MAN!!!

John

Assuming you aren't in Puerto Rico, what you are hearing is probably 'skip' -- a radio signal that 'skips' off the ionosphere and back down to your antenna.

If, as you allege, the NAL system is constitutionally flawed, there would be far more people challenging FCC NAL's and winning. This goes beyond simple citizen's 2-way radio issues. Big guns like Howard Stern have been fined by the FCC, and his respective companies forced to pay. They can afford some heavy legal muscle. If the NAL system was unconstitutional, you would think that these fines would have been overturned in a legal battle on that basis. Then, of course, the FCC would have to refine their methods if they wish to remain effective in enforcement.

I see stereotyping is a standard method of operation for you. As opposed to actually dissecting your issues and discussing their relative worth.

Any society that expects to live together must enact rules which set limits on what people can do to one another, and generally set's boundaries on an individual's right of access and right of property.

Anyone who thinks that these rules are overly restrictive or otherwise
"wrong" need to do some serious research on history and sociology.

This applies to the radio spectrum as well. There are millions of licensed users who are granted the privilege of operating on a specified band of frequencies to accomplish a particular task. Things like wireless internet, cell phones, GPS, the drive-in at a fast food joint, long haul telephone service, satellite and broadcast radio, television, and many more conveniences that some of us take for granted, need clear spectrum to operate properly. That is why the FCC controls who goes where. What do you suppose would happen if the FCC were to disappear and anyone was allowed to transmit on any frequency they pleased?

Common citizens have access to certain portions of spectrum to conduct personal business or engage in hobby talk. As you demonstrate increased responsibility and technical competence, you are granted increased privileges. That is why ham radio has more bands, modes, and power. A ham license is a certificate that demonstrates that the holder has passed tests showing that he understands the FCC operational rules, as well as possessing enough technical skill to operate higher power transmitters, erect proper antenna systems, and mitigate interference complaints.

That is not to say that there aren't CB operators equally qualified in these areas. But until they prove their competence, the FCC does not recognize it.

Eliminating ham radio and replacing it with a "no-holds-barred" radio service where people are allowed to run class "C" amps on AM, or running 10 KW into a poorly decoupled antenna, generating RFI, etc., is a recipe for disaster.

One way to illustrate how anarchy is a poor choice for RF spectrum management, is by turning the tables. If there are no rules, then you might think it's a good thing. But what if you were engaged in a radio activity that you enjoyed. All of a sudden that activity was interrupted by another station creating interference. You could no longer partake in what it is that you enjoy, thanks to the interference from the other station. Now, what do you do? There is no FCC to complain to right? Who stands up for your right of access?

Nice radio, I don't have one, but have had a chance to play with them.

Have you seen one? They are really small for the features they have..

Should work for a Nascar receiver?

I have this customer that wants to trade an almost brand new one for the last $100 of a seed job I'm going to do for him. He bought it for his son as a Christmas present but the kid doesn't want it. It looks brand new and comes with the box and manual so I'm trying to decide if I want it or not. You're right about the size..tiny radio.

It seems to get mostly good reviews in the net from what I've seen.

I'd pay $100.00 for one, seems like a good deal.. When they show up on E-bay they always run more than $100.00

>"Probably" unconstitutional? How so?

For many of the same reasons Bush's Patriot Act is unconstitutional:
you don't have the right to a fair trial or to contest all evidence;
the accused is not afforded the right to be "presumed innocent until proven guilty" because guilt is presumed (or, in the words of the FCC, "liability" is "apparent"); and guilt is determined by the accuser which is a conflict of interest. Not only that, but the procedure was concocted without any legal history or precedent -- they just came up with the idea and made it law. According the the Supreme Court, that's not "due process of law".

>>So the FCC avoids
>>any constitutional challenge to the NAL, even to the point of settling

"Heavy muscle" costs money, and big businesses make their decisions based on monetary values, not moral principles. Recent examples are Proctor & Gamble's decision to pull their commercials from "Queer Eye" and "Will & Grace", and Bill Gates pulling his support of gay rights legislation, all because of boycotts by some culturally intolerant right-wing religious homophobes. The god-squads do not represent the majority by any means, but they can put a dent in the profits of these corps who, BTW, will eventually reverse their decisions after the gay rights groups begin their own boycotts. Money, not constitutionality, is the motivating factor behind the decisions of big business.

Back to the topic.... The FCC fines have increased over the years but have never exceeded the cost of mounting a full-scale legal challenge; so the companies just take the hit, pay the fine and kiss FCC butt. I'm sure that someday the FCC will slap someone with an NAL based on a faulty financial assessment of a company and get challenged, but I'm also sure they have a contingency plan in case that ever happens. After all, they have had plenty of time to plan strategies to defend against any possible legal confrontation. But until that day comes, the FCC will continue operating as a rouge government outside the boundries of the Constitution.

And spring storms... Arrrgh. Had a ground come loose once and I got the page "Chad oldie's console is on fire!"

That was the worst electrical storm I have ever seen, My tower got hit 53 times in one day. I went thru an ass load of OpAmps that day! I was actually second in command, the CE was corporate, so, often in the spring and summer he was off building stations which put me in charge. It was a great relationship as the Engineering dept was least hasseled and my "boss" the CE and I are best friends.

I'm still over there helping out from time to time. BEs are like farmers, always willing to help each other out, I like that!

Yeah, those are great consumer cards! I went with the original audigy because they were dirt cheap at the time and sound good. My big sound card for my mastering system is a MOTU 828mkII. I love it! I recently bought it to upgrade an old Echo LAYLA, still nice but I wanted firewire.

Unfortunately I was across the street from the local community college, so the surrounding apartments had a lot of student housing. The kids would go home for the summer and convieninetly loose the jumpers. I had some too (jumpers) and would use them for the more established residents but for the kids I would do the solder in to keep from having to come back. I got pretty quick with it so I could be in and out fast. Took longer to explain what I was going to do than do it :)

My bins are slowly deteriorating as I've been out of the loop a while but I have another build this summer I said I would help on :) After that I should be back in action for a while!

My best find was 3 Invonics AM broadcast processors I think they are LVP201's. I was a touring sound engineer and I used one for lead vocal and 2 for squashing the drums. I would have the drums on a VCA and then send them to the "loud drums subgroup" for discretionary use. This would make the drums "louder" without chewing up subwoofers. Great for a drum solo and what it did for vocals was amazing. I got some pretty funny looks from other engineers on the road though :)

I sold two of them to a local studio and now have one at home on my.... u guessed it.... CB:) Talk about loud audio, screw swing, I have NO swing, the way it should be :)

I got those units from a dumpster because they had LED's burnt out, HA!

Leave it to you to say something that explicity claims one thing, and then come back and try and explain what you "really meant" because you're communiction skills suck in conveying "what you really mean". Gee Dave, since you're entrance in this group your posts are chock full of you coming back and telling people what you really meant with your words..the problem is with you, not the contingency who you need re-explain yourself..but then again, that's how you are, always blaming everyone but yourself.

Some of those who obtained licenses can never go back because their voices are too easily recognized and their hammie "friends"
will report their ass for freebanding.

>I'm not so sure that this is as prevalent as you >claim.

You're not sure of all kinds of things, so what....only -you- claimed anything was "prevalent" . You're having difficulties again, Davie.
That's cool...but entertain, for a moment, if you would, the notion you are subscribing. If you do not believe me, then you mistakenly believe the FCC is actively patrolling the air for violators. This info can be found simply by extolling a little leg work.....but I'm telling you, the FCC does NOT actively patrol the air seeking violations by hammies or cbers.

>Just how do you KNOW that?

I've told you on many occasion how I know this. Just because you can't remember or comprehend such does not mean it merits redundant repeating for your benefit. All you need know is that I know it, just like the laws surrounding the roger beep issue which you did not know. Needing the hows and WHY other people are educated on matters you are not is off-topic and serves only to illustrate you have a great deal difficulty believing anything if you are not already clued in on it ore aware of it and for some odd reason, when others know something you do not, you begin to twitch andget cornfused and your sudden fascination with how others are educated on subjects you are not begins to magically morph into your preferred topic as opposed to the original one.

 They end up being
pissed off (then issed upon) hammies.

>You discount the possibility that while exposed
>to ham radio, that many people find respect

>for the rules, and have a change of attitude.

I didn't discount it at all, as I know what you say to be true, but what I say is just as true.
Members belong to both camps.

>Yet you lambast me for my change in attitude.

Never. I cite your double-speak and hypocrisy.
The anger toward such freebanders can be seen in your own posts.

>Despite your many claims, I harbor no "anger".
>Stating facts that doesn't sit well with you, is >not the same thing as "anger".

Stating facts has you chasing your tail with semantics. You call people criminals with nothing more than your mistaken ignorance that "saying it on usenet is the same as a guilty plea in a court of law".

>An admission of guilt is an admission of guilt.

>This is not a court of law. There is no judge or >jury. If you admit to partaking in an illegal >activity, then you did it.

I was the third man on the grassy knoll.

>Anything more is simply a formality.

Your education is shining, David. Another future moment to embrace regarding your kid's perusing of your posts some day.

Although you have been given the correct information regarding the judicial system, you continue to mistakenly believe you may publicly refer to one as a criminal even if they were not convicted in a court of law.

>You do not need to be convicted of an action

>to make the reality of that action known.

There is no reality of any action once the courts find you anything other than guilty. Why is this so difficult for you?

>You continue to fall back on the flawed

>concept that you're only guilty when caught >and convicted.

This "flawed concept" you invoke is THE basis for the US justice system.
Just because you take issue with certain laws protecting those from libel or slander that you would undeservedly and illegallly refer, does not mean you get to ignore those laws. Again, your hypocrisy is illustrated brilliantly..

>As if you really are not breaking the law

>because the feds never witnessed you doing

>it.

Stay with me, David,,as you are sinking fast trying desperately again to misattribute things to othersthat are said only by your lips.

> That's as absurd as the philosophical >question of whether a tree still makes noise

>when it falls in the forest, and no one was >there to hear it.

It is, but keep in mind only -you- are putting forth such a position and it is great that you can now regognize your blather for what it is..absurd.
Several
years ago you were making posts chastising hammies as being too uptight
and uppity and technical who look down on cbers.

>Because in many cases, it's true.

Not "in many cases"..you stated "For the most part" in your post when you referred to the hammies... using the same sterotyping you just hypocritically took another to task for employing. .

>So now you're back to your old game of >obfuscation and semantic word games.

You mean this is where you come back and say you meant something else and need to explain just what you REALLY meant when you said "for the most part".

>There are hams who are stuffy and uptight.

>But they are legal. The converse is also true.

>Many outlaw CB'ers feel that they have a right

>to do just what (and where) they please

>without due regard for the rights of anyone >else.

Same is true with many hammies,

>But they are not here claiming any perceived >right to do so.

You have it half right,,,"preceived" was finally a correct term, as -you- are the only one speaking of any "right" to break the law. Come to think of it, it has always been you falsely accusing cbers of claiming some "right" to break the law, yet no one is furthering that position,,except YOU.
_
yet for some reason, you do not voice your concern for those you hold in higher regards, higher esteem,,,you know,,those who are supposed to lead by example.

>So, you posit that because there is a certain >percentage of "bad hams" who break the >rules, that that gives you a right to do it on the

>freeband?

I posit nothing of the sort. Your piss-poor suppositioning is responsible for your incoherent assumptions.

> RFI, direct interference, and public nuisance

>issues do not seem to affect them.

"Them" is not limited exclusively to cb users.

>No, but responsible radio operators on either >service, will cooperate to minimize such >issues.

Such as many good and decent freebanders. You were taught this long ago when you had your clock cleaned reegarding any interference you claim can come from use of the freeband to other services. This subject took a little clarifying on your behalf, as you couldn't handle the truth that the band parallels the ten meter band in capabilities and conditions leading to any imagined interference you claim. This defeat led to you down the path of of more assumptions on your behalf and the invocation that freebanders are more prone to use dirty amps than ten meter ops. Your off topic desperate ploy signaled your defeat.

> Either behavior is reprehensible, and I've >defended each respective group when on the >receiving end of such stereotypical prejudice.

Yet, you continue to employ it yourself.

>Not at all.

Of course, That ever-growing list of regs here that have told you your actions has been hypocritical are all wrong and you are correct.

>Lately it's the hams who are unfairly on the >receiving end of this prejudice.

Why is it unfair to illustrate the same behavior committed by hammies that you complain about when committed by cbers?

>Because as a matter of percentage, the >number of law breaking hams compared to >licensed users, is much smaller than the >amount of illegal operators compared to legal

>CB'ers.

Going by the numbers provided by the FCC, you are dead wrong.

>Everyone on the freeband is illegal.

Very good, David. Now try and explain away how this translates into your claim that there are A) More users on the freeband than illegal hammie ops and B) supply anyything at all that supports your contention, other than invoking your subjective and incorrect "empirical observation", because when we invoke another of your terms (statistical probability) and employ its methodology (inof supplied by the FCC) you are dead wrong, as such proves just what the feds correctly deem a more serious problem. You have always had a hard-on over the manner in which the feds enforce hammie radio but not cb and it manifests in your heathen-like behavior among our fine little group of freebanders and cbers, who, for the most part, are better ops than yoursel, as you shit all over the hammie creed based on your personal incorrect judgements, ignorance of the law, and anger over such.

>You don't need fancy equipment to figure it >out. Mere presence of a station there is all that >is needed to make the very accurate empirical >observation.

Such techniques are flawed in your employ, as you are unable to comprehend the correct definition of it. Need shown again where you muffed the term and claimed it was something it wasn't? It would be my pleasure,,really.

>On the other hand, a ham running twice the >power output on 75 meters would not be >readily apparent to someone listening as the

During your admitted
freebanding and illegal operating years, not once will you find a post by yourself calling others names or expressing nosey concern for other people's business that does not affect you.

>I still don't.

Dude, you have been calling anyone who disagrees with you names for years, (often accompanied by the obligatory self-excusing your behavior with the now infamous but pathetic and defeated "if the shoe fits" line) but you go on and illustrate your manias via denial.

> I'm not the one trying desperately to find out >personal information (often >incorrectly like the name of my wife) about

>other people.

Yes, you were. In fact, you initiated the personal info game with me and everyone knows it. You were told long ago to stay out of the personal, off-topic arena. Once you violate this, you have nothing to say when your initiated behavior is returned.

>.I did nothing of the sort.

Sure you did, Davie..you were told time and time again that your personal comments regardng anyone that posted things you had problems with were off-topic and to remain on topic.

>I attempted no such action against you or >anyone else. I challenge you to prove >otherwise. Believe me, if you were that >important enough to make me want to find out

I call your bluff again, David, as I have been doing for years. You're all talk.

>Also worthy of note is the time you spend

>then tried to attribute to me.

"Anarchy" plus sock puppets = statistical probablity.

_
There,, now there's another little tidbit of information for you to wallow in. I remember just about everything, and in most cases you refer, I merely have to type in the pertinent key words of your past posts and voila!....no time at all
spent other than three clicks right to the passage needed to illustrate your incorrectness, hypocrisy, and double-talk, and lies.

>Sure, that's why you keep making those >glaring errors.

The face of your much-tried lies are the errors. Let's revisit the thread where you lost your cool, threatened me, and lied not once, not twice, but every time your threat was mentioned....you have a real problem with that one.

However, after having your
clock cleaned in reec.radio.cb by cbers for your oft extended hypocrisy,

>reec (reek?) a freudian slip?

Which speaks volumes of how you think.

>On a higher plain than you? Probably.

Of course, all those people who tried to gently tell you that you suffer a great deal from frequent hypocrisy couldn't possibly be correct, because they are all wrong and you are right. In fact, you are always right and everone else that illustrates your negativty is somehow collectively wrong.

That you attribute such behavior (name calling, attacking those who merely dx or freeband) to "growing up", illustrates the fact you were an incredible late bloomer and extremely slow learner who hasn't fully matured yet, as your behavior continued well in to your thirties.

>Well, then if I'm still "growing up", then you

>have yet to start because you are still

>engaged in that illegal behavior.

I'm not the one that made the farcical connection between the two...again -you- did.

>And even when corrected, I'm sure you'll still >come back sometime in the future and claim >that I "admitted" to still actively freebanding.

So now you are saying you never did?
Gee Dave, you're really tweaked. I apologize if I am rendering you completely incoherent, but such happens with malicious liars not unlike yourself.

In fact, you still are
illegal and have no right to say anything to anyone,

>I assume you have some proof of this? Yea I >know, you have tons of proof, but you're not

>about to post it.

No Dave, that isn't the standard reply, but I'll remind you since you struggle with memory impairment. You initiated unsolicited claims,,many of them. When challenged for proof, you declined for personal reasons. You are still free to provide proof for any of your unasnwered claims, and then, as proper decorum and communicative technique dictates, will have your inquiries answered with proof in turn.

>Like I said........ You have no proof.

And like I said,,,you lie. About everything.

as for starters, the address you provided the FCC is not your primary residence and the fact that you fail to correct this matter with the FCC even after being informed you are illegal, leaves you no credibility with anything you may say regarding other's actions.

>You really, REALLY need to go back to cause yourself great pains concerning others.

>You are the one making the personal claims.

I toss things back over the sharp fence post upon which you sit.

>It

>obviously concerns you. Your words say one

There's that crystal ball again. Tell me, oh delusional seer of all, these motivations only you see expressed in my entrance to the group.

>and Jones), has you so confused, that you

Agreed. Perhaps you can explain how you mistakenly feel your unsolicited but invoked claim regarding a company directory relates to anything,

>It's an example of just how common my name >is.

Your name is nothing. Your license plate was confirmation. Wake up, David. You're not up to this type game.

>It's the ultimate irony for someone like you,

>who craves anonymity.

There goes your self-projection and problems with cb..lol.

>You go to great pains to hide who you are,

>while I gladly reveal my name.

Not only did I offer to meet with you even after your direct threat, I offered to post pics of me in this group at the designated place on the designated day with the day's newspaper date visible to prove I was there after you cowardly tried to say I wouldn't show after YOUR great pains and threats to find ME. Get over yourself. You're all bullshit.

>Yet even when armed with that information,

> That also explains why you keep insisting that >my wife's name is "Kimberly

>T. Hall", and that she's a "teacher".

She may not teach now, but she tried to at least once.

>Yea, ok, whatever you say.

Hahahah,,it's not what I say, its what SHE said.
No wonder your dithering blather gives way to nervous paranoia.

>In

>conclusion, you continue to trust unreliable

>sources which provide you erroneous >information and then accuse others of things

>.which are incorrect.

Gee Dave,,,when someone emails me your webpage to alert me to the fact that your license plate was visible in the picture, and the address the plate traced to doesn't match the one you provided to the FCC as your personal address, you may have to explain those discrepancies some day.

>It is not my credibility that >is in question here, it's yours.

>But wait? Wasn't it you who just accused ME >of trying to obtain people's personal

>information?

It was also myself that instructed you years ago that off-topic personal

>that when you make personal information

>comments about other people. And lest you >try to use the excuse that it's my fault, how >.many people have you accused Frank of

And how many people have you hurled unsolicited claims regaridng your education to, but fail to provide when asked? IOW, your regurgitations are important enough, according to you, to invoke, but not provide for....now THAT is the Davie we have all come to know and remember as hypocritical, cowardy, and a liar.

>And you call me hypocritical. Sheesh.......

So does a growing list of regs in here.
But nothing hypocitiical at all about giving you back your initiated behavior.

>Bad behavior is inexcusable regardless of who >started it.

You would be amazed at how much would evaporate once you cease initiating it, but you are unable, as you lack self-control and emotional stability, whcih leads you to find fault with everyone you disagree and go off on off-topic tangents regarding self-invoked unsolicited and always unsubstantiated claims about others.

> When you were growing up and in school, it >didn't matter who started the fight, you BOTH >got suspended. Both are equally culpable.

Ummm..no. When I was going to school, we didn't get suspended for fighting, Dave. Fights were so common where I went to school that the only thing that would get one suspended was hitting a staff member, drugs, or possession of a weapon.

>Using the excuse; "Well, he started it!" is truly >feeble and a poor justification for your own

The same justification you set forward regarding the invasion of Afghanistan,,then,,,Iraq. Again, your hypocrisy brilliantly illustrated when you are held to your own bullshit...ha..I love it,,,what better way to begin my workweek(end)?

 In fact, you were warned on many occasion that this is what your initiated behavior would degrade to.

>But I never claimed or threatened to find out

You did, Dave, and continue to do it to all you disagree in the form of unsolicited claims regarding your education and your imagined and oft-hallucinations and fancying yourself schooled in medical diagnoses. But, again, if the information is incorrect, ignore it and toss it out the window...but for some obvious reasons, you chose to bitch about it.

It's not much different than getting a speeding ticket. You are prove innocence, if you are so inclined. Nothing unusual about that.

The idea that every law has to have "legal history" is ludicrous. At some point in history a precedent has to be set based on little more than circumstances. Laws which deal with technology which did not exist 200+ years ago, cannot have much history. There has to be a definite beginning.
